Sydney:—Printed by WILLIAM JOHN ROW, Government Printer, and Published by him at the Government Printing Office, Bent-street.—November 29, 1842.

In 1887, the first year of the new century, the population of the United States was 50,191,000. This was a significant increase from the 39,000,000 recorded in 1870. The growth was primarily due to immigration from Europe and the westward expansion of the continent. The industrial revolution was in full swing, and the economy was booming. The government was expanding its role in the economy, and the social structure was changing rapidly.

Table 1: Population of the United States, 1870-1887

Year	Population
1870	39,000,000
1875	44,000,000
1880	50,000,000
1887	50,191,000

Table 2: Immigration to the United States, 1870-1887

Year	Immigrants
1870	150,000
1875	200,000
1880	300,000
1887	400,000

The data shows a clear upward trend in both population and immigration. The population growth was consistent over the period, while immigration showed a more significant increase in the later years. This reflects the continued attraction of the United States as a land of opportunity for immigrants from Europe. The economic conditions and the availability of land in the western states were major factors in this migration. The government's policies regarding immigration and land ownership also played a role in shaping these trends.
