TO HER MAJESTY.

HIS Excellency the Governor has directed the subjoined Circular Despatch to be published for general information.

By His Excellency's Command,
WILLIAM C. HAINES.
E.608.

(CIRCULAR.)

Downing street, 2nd October, 1857.
SIR,—It frequently happens that persons in this country, as well as foreign parts, forward for presentation to the Queen books and other articles.

In order to protect Her Majesty against the inconvenience which the common adoption of this practice must inevitably occasion, it has been laid down as a rule that no book or other article can be presented to Her Majesty without her consent previously obtained. The same rule ought obviously to be extended to Her Majesty's colonial possessions. I have therefore to desire that you will conform yourself to it by declining to forward for presentation to Her Majesty any article without special permission to that effect.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
H. LABOUCHERE.

Governor Sir H. Barkly,

TROUBRIDGE SHOALS, SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

THE undermentioned notice has been received in this department from the Government of South Australia, and is published for general information.

Copies of the charts of the Troubridge Shoals, from recent surveys, have been deposited in the offices of the Chief Harbor Master, Williamstown, and the Shipping Master, Melbourne, where they may be seen on application.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.—NOTICE TO MARINERS.

The following report of a resurvey of the shoals in the vicinity of Troubridge Lighthouse is published for general information.

JOHN HART,
Treasurer.

Chief Harbor Office,
Port Adelaide, November, 1857.

(The bearings given in these directions are magnetic. The soundings are at low water spring tides.)

In consequence of the discovery of a shoal bank to the eastward of the Troubridge Lighthouse, a resurvey of the shoals in its locality has been rendered necessary, together with the construction of a new and extended chart of that portion of St. Vincent's Gulf.

From very careful observations, the position of the lighthouse has been determined, as follows:—Latitude 35° 7' 32" south, longitude 137° 50' 37" east, magnetic variation 6° 39' east.

High water, full and change, at 3h. 30m. Rise and fall at ordinary springs 6 feet.

The flood sets N.N.E., ebb S.S.W., when to the eastward of the island. To the southward and westward of the island the tides are rapid and the flood sets on the shoals.

The lighthouse tower stands eighty (80) feet above high-water mark, on a low sandy island covered with bushes.

The light, which is bright, without color, is exhibited to the observer from all points of the compass every half (1) minute, and may be distinguished on a clear night, from the deck of a moderate-sized vessel, at a distance of sixteen (16) miles.

Mariners, however, should not estimate their distance from the time of their first making the light, as, owing to refraction, it is often seen from distances when the lantern is considerably below the line of the natural horizon.

Commanders of vessels bound up St. Vincent's Gulf should bring the light to bear N.E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  N. sixteen (16) miles, and steer N.E. by E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  E. until that object bears W. by N.  $\frac{1}{4}$  N. distant eight or ten miles, when a course of N.E. may be shaped for the lightship off the bar of Port Adelaide.

Shoal water exists fully three (3) miles to the southward, and the same distance to the south-westward, on rocky patches.

A bank called Tapley's Shoal, of great extent, has been recently discovered, and its position ascertained by a very careful and minute survey.

The south end of Tapley's Shoal bears from the lighthouse N.  $84^{\circ}$  E. Three and a half ( $3\frac{1}{2}$ ) miles from thence, the shoal trends in an E.N.E. direction about one and three quarter ( $1\frac{3}{4}$ ) miles, from which point it extends three and a half ( $3\frac{1}{2}$ ) miles; the edge of the shoal then takes a north-westerly direction for about two (2) miles, and returns to the southward for (3) miles, from thence it trends again west for one (1) mile, and then south for a similar distance.

The shoalest water ascertained was sixteen (16) feet at the N.E. extremity of the shoal, from which the lighthouse bears S.  $52^{\circ}$  W., distant six (6) miles. Within the limit of the shoal, very irregular soundings occur, varying from three (3) to seven (7) fathoms, over an uneven bottom of sand and seaweed. The bottom, in fine weather, can be clearly seen—the sand shewing very distinctly in relief among the dark patches of sea-weed. Though great care was taken to ascertain the shoalest patch on this extensive shoal, it may be possible and not improbable that less water may be found than sixteen (16) feet; and, owing to the rapidity of the tides, and the effect they may produce by heaping up the sand and seaweed of which the bottom is composed, the soundings given on the chart may be, at some future time, either reduced or increased in places.

Tapley's Shoal offers no impediment to navigators proceeding up the gulf; but to vessels bound down, meeting with westerly winds, and trying to keep the weather shore on board, it will be found to be directly in their track, and, in deeply-loaded ships, should be most carefully avoided.

Commanders of vessels, to avoid Tapley's Shoal, should keep the tops of the houses on the island dipping, as observed from the poop of a moderate sized vessel when the lighthouse bears from S.W. to W.

Excellent anchorage will be found under the lee of Troubridge Island and S.W. shoals, and the adjacent land, by bringing the light to bear from S.S.W. to S.S.E., distant from two (2) to four (4) miles, in soundings varying from seven (7) to nine (9) fathoms. I most strongly recommend commanders of vessels to make use of the valuable anchorage in MacDonnell Sound during south and westerly gales, when proceeding to the southward or westward, as, in a deep ship, it is almost impossible to contend against the strong tides which, from the direction of the winds, act more adversely than favorably for the vessel working to windward.

B. DOUGLAS,
Naval Officer and Harbor Master, South Australia.

Chief Secretary's Office,
Melbourne, 20th January, 1858.
