SUNKEN REEF, NEW HEBRIDES.

CAPTAIN GOODALL, of the schooner May Queen, reports the existence of a sunken Coral Reef—upon which he got a cast of 48 feet at low water—in latitude 15° 46' 30" S., longitude 167° 19' 30" E., 1½ miles from the western side of Vanua Lava, and bearing from the North Cascade S.E. by S. ½ S. The reef is about ½ of a cable in extent, and has 12 fathoms water all round it.

G. P. HEATH, Commander R.N.,
Portmaster.Department of Ports and Harbors,
Brisbane, 24th August 1874.

CUMBERLAND ISLANDS.

THE master of the ship Lady Douglas reports the existence of a Coral Reef, drying at low water, and extending from the westward of the southernmost "Sand P. D." to K. 4½ Isle, and "Sand and Rocks" to the eastward, and thus connecting the Islet and Sand Banks.

REEF, WALKER BAY—BETWEEN WALKER AND MONKHOUSE POINTS.

Masters of vessels are cautioned that, in Walker Bay, rocks dry at low water extend out to the edge of the shoal water shown upon the chart, their outer extremity bearing S.E. by S. ½ S. from Monkhouse Point, and their south-western limit W. ½ N. from the Rocky Point forming the south-east headland of the bay.

Small craft intending to get shelter under this point should round it at a distance of, and at not less than one cable, and then haul up and anchor in 10 feet low water springs, about three cables from the point.

SUNKEN REEF, HALIFAX BAY.

Mr. J. H. Mayer, master of the schooner Marchioness of Lorne, reports the existence of a Sunken Reef lying about 1½ or 2 miles W.S.W. from the north-west point of Rattlesnake Island. The reef lies east and west, is of small extent, and is covered by about 2 feet of water at low water springs.

Portmaster.Department of Ports and Harbors,
Brisbane, 24th August 1874.All bearings are magnetic.—Variation in 1874, 7° easterly.
EAST COAST OF NEW GUINEA WITH OFF-LYING ISLANDS.

General Remarks.

THE east end of New Guinea, terminating in what is called East Cape, is a long, narrow, hilly peninsula, increasing in height to the westward, having at its extremity two small coral islets, its north shore being washed by the waters of Goschen Strait, its south by those of Milne Bay. Immediately to the southward, Milne Bay runs in, in a westerly direction, 31 miles, and is about 8 miles across, after rounding the south-east shore of which China Strait divides the high bluff land of the south-east part of New Guinea from the islands discovered in 1873, in H.M.S. Basilisk, by Captain J. Moresby.

The three principal islands taken in order from west to east (appearing in the distance as part of the main-land) are called Hayter, Basilisk, and Moresby. Of these the latter is the largest, highest, and most important. China Strait separates Hayter Island from the main-land—Rocky Pass (a narrow gut), Hayter from Basilisk Island—and Portescue Strait, Basilisk from Moresby Island. To the eastward of these the islands become smaller and more scattered,—Haines, Connor, Glenton, and Smith continuing the chain, until a decided break of 5 miles occurs, when the Engineer Group, consisting of four islands, varying in height from about 596 to 300 feet, are seen, with Bentley and Mudge Islands to the southward, all differing more or less in aspect and description.

The navigator not expecting to find islands in this vicinity, and viewing the whole from a distance of 20 or 25 miles, might easily be led to suppose that as far east as Smith Island the land from the south-east cape of New Guinea was continuous; China and Portescue Straits being shut in, and the channels between Smith, Connor, and Moresby Islands having the appearance of dips in a range of hills; and this would account for the error fallen into by former explorers in so describing it, for what was formerly thought to be the south-east cape is almost identical in geographical position with what has now been found to be and named Smith Islet.

To the north-eastward of the Engineer Group are many small islets of coral formation, insignificant in size, similar in aspect, and, with the exception of the northern of the two called Hazard Islets, uninhabited.

Lydia Island, 20 miles further north again, is loftier, larger, well cultivated, and inhabited, and, with its dependent islets of Gibbons and Stansfield, forms a picturesque group on the south side of Goschen Strait. Twenty-four miles to the eastward of Lydia Island, are the Dawson Islands (six in number), the highest being about 500 feet above the sea level; they are thickly wooded, unattractive, and without inhabitants. Scattered farther to the south-west are more coral-formed islets, to which the names of Grace, Hull, Blakeney, and Hardman have been given, partaking of the same nature and description as those of Dawson. To the north-westward of these again, the chain of hills forming the peninsula terminating in East Cape, and decreasing in height as the cape is approached, juts out into the strait; beyond are seen the lofty mountains of the Prevost Range, rising to an altitude of upwards of 3,000 feet, and descending steeply to the sea, forming the northern boundary of Goschen Strait and south coast of Normanby Island (the eastern of the D'Entrecasteaux Group). The actual summits of this range are generally hidden by clouds, but a remarkable gap, of which the position has been marked in the chart, affords an excellent mark in almost all conditions of weather.

Teste Island, formerly thought the western island of the Louisiade Archipelago (see Australian Directory, vol. 2, second edition, page 383), stands 17 miles to the southward of Moresby Island, and with the Bell Rock may be called the finger-post for vessels intending to pass through Goschen Strait from the southward; it is visible at a distance of 20 miles from a ship's deck, its conical peaks appearing like detached islets, the whole blending upon nearer approach.

Soundings.—A bank, with depths varying from 7 to 18 fathoms, unites Lebrun and Heath Islands with those of Blanchard and Dumoulin, the nature of the bottom being coral and sand, owing to which, and the numerous tiderips, the water has the appearance of being shoaler than it really is, there being no less depth than 7 fathoms found in the Basilisk, or her boats. Three and a half miles south of Teste Island, the sunken barrier reef, generally marked by ripples, runs in an easterly direction, but may be safely crossed with the largest Lebrun Islet, on a N.N.E. ¼ E. bearing. To the eastward of Teste Island the depths are from 25 to 35 fathoms sandy bottom; for 7 miles immediately to the eastward of this distance no bottom is obtainable with 60 fathoms. Four hundred and twenty-five fathoms, brown sand, was found about 5 miles north-eastward of Imbert Island, and a continuation of no bottom at 60, between this position and Smith Islet. To the northward of Smith Island, and between it and the Shortland Reefs (in the main route), depths of 29 to 50 fathoms were found; to the north-eastward of these last-mentioned reefs, and in the direction of Hardman Islets, no bottom with 35 fathoms; and a mile south-west of the western or larger Hardman, 300 fathoms, coral bottom. Again, about midway between the Hardman Islets and Gallows Reef (the middle danger of Goschen Strait), a cast was got of 500 fathoms over a bottom of yellow ooze; between Gallows and Grind Reefs, 120 fathoms, no bottom; and westward of these reefs, about mid-channel between the south coast of Normanby and Lydia Islands, 510 and 570 fathoms were found, the bottom in both cases being a mixture (of which a specimen was preserved) of yellow sand and mud.

In the above description the depths in the Main or Blakeney Island route have been followed; in other parts, mushroom coral patches are so numerous, and depths so uncertain, that to particularize would be only to puzzle, and the chart which will shortly be published, is the best guide, to which the mariner is referred, together with the more detailed description which will be given hereafter.

Winds and Weather.—Of the Basilisk's visit of 1873 to this locality, Captain Moresby reports:—
 "The wind and current chart compiled by the Admiralty is no guide during the months of February, March, April and May. In February and March of that year, calms and variable winds were experienced, and fine clear weather. Occasionally a fresh breeze from the south-east would prevail for two or three days, which would again be succeeded by calms and light winds. Excepting two or three days, the weather was always dry.

"In the same months of 1874, more wind and rain were experienced, the westerly monsoon with unsettled weather being met with from the middle of February to the 11th of March. After which, easterly breezes with sometimes calm and clear weather were felt; then, after a few days of unsettled rainy weather with strong east-south-east breeze, it again became fine with light and variable winds, generally from the northward, until the 29th April, when the Basilisk left the vicinity of East Cape for the westward. From June to November it is probable that a steady south-east monsoon blows on the east and north-east coast of New Guinea, but this has yet to be ascertained."

Tides are excessively irregular and appeared to be greatly influenced by the state and duration of the wind. The rise and fall at springs was estimated to be not more than 5 feet. Near Teste Island, flood set to the northward, ebb to the southward, attaining at spring tides a speed of two knots. Between Teste Island and the southern entrance of China Strait, the direction of the stream became deflected to the east and westward, but opportunity did not offer of testing the exact direction or speed. In Fortescue and China Straits, the tides run with greater velocity, the direction of stream following that of the straits, flood to the north, ebb to the south, and at spring tides reaching as great a speed as five knots. Between Smith Islet and the Engineer Group, less tidal influence was observed, owing to the greater depth of water, and wideness of the channel. In the more confined parts, between Smith Islet and the south-east extremity of Moresby Island, the tides ran four to five knots, setting in the same direction as in China and Fortescue Straits. In the vicinity of Blakney Island, the flood stream set north-west, the ebb south-east. In Goschen Strait, between Grind and Gallows Reefs, the flood set west by north, the ebb east by south, at spring tides 1½ knots an hour. Constant attention and employment in other particulars of surveying, prevented certain analysis or watching of the tides, except in China Strait, which will be described at later date, but sufficient was ascertained to justify the statement, that in no part of the main route to, and through Goschen Strait, does the speed of the tide exceed 2½ knots an hour.

Natives of this part of New Guinea and Islands were of small stature, averaging about 5 feet 3 inches in height, of a dark copper brown color, small boned, and of lithe and athletic shape. The hair was generally frizzled, and often ornamented with feathers of birds of Paradise, or fork-shaped wooden combs with white streamers. The body was entirely naked except a small band of dried leaf arranged round the loins and middle, the upper portion, and sometimes the whole face being adorned with black and white pigment. Armlets and necklaces of cowrie and other shells, and dried berries were commonly worn, as also bands of cocoa fibre ornamented with shell, at the knee-joint. Their arms consisted of slings, with which they were very expert, and wooden spears, clubs, and swords of various descriptions of hard wood, more or less ornamented and finished. No bows or arrows were seen among them. The V shaped stone hatchet—the blade being a species of green stone resembling serpentine—appeared to be their sole implement for the manufacture of their huts and canoes. Hoop-iron which they call "keelam" is most in demand among them, pieces of about eight inches in length by an eighth of an inch thick (suitable for fixing in the handles of their hatchets) finding greatest favor. Turkey red handkerchief was also in request by the younger portion of the community and women; trade knives and beads they did not care for. At some islands fish-hooks were appreciated, and small American axes preferred to scrap iron. The women were not often induced to visit the ship, but when seen, were invariably attired in a petticoat of grass or cocconut leaf, reaching to the knee, the upper part of their body being naked.

Caution should be used in dealing with these people, as they are much inclined to pilfer; in some parts they appeared trustworthy and friendly, assisting in carrying instruments, water, &c. for a small reward, but the Basilisk being a steam-vessel, and having a large number of men, kept them in a state of surprise and civility. With the store-ship Reconnaissance as well as with H.M.S. Sandfly their demeanor was at times threatening and insolent; and at the Dumoulin Islands, on one occasion, they showed signs of attacking a boat of the Basilisk which put in from stress of weather. It is requisite to be armed upon all occasions, and treat misbehaviour with rigor, leniency being interpreted by them as weakness.

Water may be obtained in numerous places on the south side of Milne Bay, westward of Spike Island. Moresby and Basilisk Islands do not afford favorable positions for watering in bulk, in ship's boats. In Possession Bay, water can be carried in casks from the well marked upon the chart, but it is of doubtful quality. Sandfly Bay, in Skelton Island, has good water in small quantity at the back of the village. Centipede Bay, on the south-east coast of Normanby Island, has a fresh water lagoon (at low water) inside the beach, where it is easily procurable.

Supplies of cocoanuts, yams, taro, pumpkins, and bananas—the latter of inferior quality—and sometimes a pig, can be obtained in exchange for hoop-iron. In Normanby Island pigs appeared plentiful, and, when anchored in Duchess Cove, very many were bought; "boru" is the native name for these animals. A few turtle were also procured from the natives near Possession Bay (Moresby Island). On the uninhabited coral-formed islands bush turkey were frequently shot, and the large cream-colored pigeon of Torres Straits have their favorite resorts in certain localities of the islands, which are easily ascertained. Sea-fowl, except a few duck and curlew, appeared scarce.

No. 60.—SEPTEMBER 18, 1874.—2.

Directions.—If bound to Goschen Strait or the eastern islands of New Guinea, vessels will do well to pass to the eastward of Cato, Wreck, and Kenn reefs, and eastward of Saumarez and Frederick reefs. Care should be taken to make Teste Island by day, and if within 60 miles and overtaken by night, the navigator should shorten sail until daylight, as the current was found, in the month of February, during a strong westerly gale, to set 2½ knots an hour to the east north-east, or directly on to the reefs southward of Teste Island. Both Bell Rock (420 feet high) and Teste Island afford good land-marks, but if the weather is thick, the Stuers Islets, which are low and woody, may be the first land sighted; and it is possible that the high land of Moresby Island (1300 feet high) may be seen looming in the distance, previous to sighting any of the above-mentioned islands. Having passed between Suckling Reef and the Stuers Islets, the sunken barrier can be crossed in from 9 to 10 fathoms, with the high Lebrun Islet on a N.N.E. ¼ E. bearing. If the Suckling Reef is passed to the westward, the larger Lebrun Islet should not be brought to bear eastward of north, as the tides and eddies run strong on the bank south-westward of the Lebrun Islets. The passage south-east of Teste Island should be avoided, as a depth of 4 fathoms was here struck, and it has not been sufficiently examined. Having crossed the sunken barrier, steer to pass about a mile westward of Bell Rock, after passing which, a N.N.E. course should be steered (allowing for set of tide) to pass eastward of Glenton and Smith Islets; and if requisite, anchorage may be found on the bank of sand in about 9 fathoms of water, which stretches about 2 miles to the northward of Foolsap Rock. Glenton and Smith Islet past, a north course should be steered, and if the weather be fine, the west extremity of Slade Island, in line with the same extremity of Bentley Island, is a good mark for continuing upon until Shortland Island bears S.W. by W. ¼ W., when the southern of the Hardman Islets, in line with the south point of the largest Dawson Island N.E. by E. ¼ E. will take a ship clear of the foul ground to the south of Blakney Island. When Blakney Island bears N.W. by N. ¼ N. by W. ¼ W. course will lead up to the passage between Grind and Gallows reefs, care been taken to check the position by cross bearings, as the tides set strong to the east and west in this part of Goschen Strait. When the north point of Lydia Island is seen between the islets of Jack and Ketch, on the bearing of W. by S. southerly, a W. ¼ M. course will lead in mid-channel between the reefs, clear of danger.

The above preliminary remarks upon the east part of New Guinea, Goschen Strait, and the off-lying islands will be followed by a more detailed description hereafter.
