VICTORIAN RAILWAYS.

I NSTRUCTIONS TO SIGNALMEN.—Approved by the Board of Land and Works, 8th September 1881:—

Working of signals to be tested.—The signalman on duty must see that the points and signals are kept in perfect working order, and well oiled, and report to the station-master or officer under whose supervision he acts, and to the inspector of the permanent-way, or other person in charge of repairs, any case in which the points, switches, or signals are out of order, or not properly cleaned or oiled.

Signals to be frequently tested.—Care in putting on distant signals.—Wires to be regulated.—The signalman must frequently examine and try the working of his distant and other signals, to see that they work well, are kept clean, and that the signals show in the proper direction. Great care must be used in putting on a distant signal; it is not sufficient merely to move the lever, but the signalman must, at the same time, watch the signal, or its repeater, so as to ascertain that it obeys the lever, and goes fully on to "Danger." He must take care that the signal wires are kept at the proper length by means of the regulating screws, so as to compensate for the expansion and contraction caused by variations of the temperature.

When home or starting signals become defective.—In the event of a home or starting signal becoming defective, or not working efficiently, a competent person must be placed outside such signal with hand signals and detonators, to act under the instructions of the signalman.

When distant signals become defective.—In the event of a distant signal becoming defective, or not working efficiently, a competent person must be stationed just outside the signal, with hand signals and detonators, to act under the instructions of the signalman; and when such person is out of sight of the home signal, one or more men must be stationed between that post and the defective signal, for the purpose of repeating by hand signals to the man stationed at the distant signal the signals exhibited at the home signal post.

Use of distant signals.—Distant signals must be placed at "Danger" immediately they are passed by a train or engine, and must be kept at "Danger" whenever any obstruction or danger exists upon the line they are intended to protect, and the danger signal must remain exhibited until the obstruction or danger is removed.

Use of home signal.—Whenever the distant signal is at "Danger," the danger signal must also be exhibited at the home signal, except in the case of an approaching train for which both the signals have been taken off. The distant signal must be placed at "Danger" as soon as the engine of the train has passed it, and the home signal be allowed to remain at "All Right," or "Caution," as the case may be, until the train has passed it, or has been brought to a stand, and, in the case of junctions, has passed clear over the facing points.

Obstruction of line by shunting or otherwise.—The line must not be obstructed or occupied by shunting or otherwise, until the signals applicable to the line or lines about to be obstructed have first been placed at "Danger."

Signals to be exhibited in case of obstruction.—Should any impediment or obstruction exist upon the line within the sight or knowledge of the signalman, he must exhibit the "Danger" signals, and prevent any train or engine passing his post in that direction until such impediment or obstruction has been removed, and the line made perfectly clear and safe.

Facing points.—When a train is approaching facing points, the signalman must be specially careful to see that the lever of the locking frame which governs the facing points is close home to the frame, and the catch firmly down in the notch, and so kept till the whole of the train has passed.

Points to be frequently tested.—All facing points must be frequently tested by the signalman, so that he may satisfy himself they work well, and that no part is injured.

Points to be securely fastened, and held for the passage of trains.

—Facing points not worked from a locking frame must, in all cases, be securely fastened or held for the passage of trains. It is the duty of signalmen to see that the last vehicle of every train going over points under their charge has passed perfectly clear of the points before any alteration is made either in the points or signals.

Working of junction signals.—All signals at junctions must be kept at "Danger," except when lowered for a train to pass. When a train approaches a junction, the signalman must ascertain whether the line on which the train is about to run is clear, and, if so, next see that the facing points are properly set for the coming train, and then exhibit the signals for it to proceed.

When two trains approach a junction at same time.—If, when two or more trains approach a junction at nearly the same time, the signalman should have lowered the signals for a train which should have been kept back for the passage of another, he must not attempt to alter the order of the trains by reversing the signals, but must put up all the signals to "Danger," and keep them on until all the trains have been brought to a stand, when precedence can be given to the proper train.

Time interval between trains at junctions.—Should two trains, which have to run forward on the same line, approach a junction within five minutes of each other, the second train must be stopped and the engine-driver informed of the train in advance; if the first train has passed more than five minutes, but less than ten minutes, the signalman must exhibit the caution signal by hand, hand lamp, or flag, as occasion may require, to the engine-driver of the second train.

To give information to the person relieving.—Before a signalman or pointsman goes off duty he must take care to inform the person relieving him how the ordinary, and, if any, special trains are running in their respective districts.

Signalman to repeat guard's signal to driver, if necessary.—Signalmen in charge of signal-boxes at the entrance to station yards must be particularly careful to observe every outward train as it leaves the platform; they are also to look towards the platform immediately after the train has left, in case the guard or station-master should make a "Stop" signal, which, if made, the signalman is at once to repeat to the engine-driver, in order that the train may be stopped.

To be furnished with proper signals by application.—Persons required to give signals must furnish themselves, by application to the proper quarter, with red and green flags, a lamp with red, green, and white glasses, a whistle, and ten detonating signals; all these must be kept constantly in a state of readiness for immediate use.

Care of distant signals.—Signalmen, or porters in charge of signals, must make themselves acquainted with the mode of slackening or tightening the wire of distant signals, and they must adjust the wire as it may be required.

Care of night signals.—During the night time every man in charge of distant or any fixed signals must, from time to time, satisfy himself that the lamp trimming, where oil is used, is in perfect condition, and, whether oil or gas, that a bright light is exhibited by the lamps; all signals should be lighted not later than sunset.

Not to turn a train into a siding if travelling too fast.—No train is to be turned into a siding when approaching too fast to enter in safety, but must be kept on the straight road; the switchman must note every instance where a train in passing through facing points runs at an excessive speed, and report the same, as well as any other irregularity which may come under his observation, as required by Rule 17.

Shunting train from one main line to the other to allow another to pass.—When a train or engine has to be shunted from one main line to the other, to allow a following train to pass, such train or engine must be set well within the home signal, so as to be efficiently protected by it from any train or engine approaching from the opposite direction.

Shunting operations to be protected.—No engine or vehicle must be shunted or moved from one main line to the other, or from the main line into a siding, or from a siding on to the main line, until the proper signals have been exhibited in one or both directions, as may be required; and care must be taken when the main line is about to be obstructed, after a distant signal has been placed at "Danger" for the purpose of protecting it, to allow sufficient time to elapse for any approaching engine or train (which may have been near to or within such signal before it was so placed at "Danger") to pass before the obstruction is allowed.

Signal-box to be kept private.—Each signalman must keep his signal-box strictly private, and not allow any persons other than the authorized officer, and members of his family who may have to visit him during meals, to enter it.

Signal on rear of train for special to follow.—Special trains run without notice.—A special train to follow is indicated by the preceding train carrying on the last vehicle a red disc, or a red flag by day, and an additional red tail lamp by night, but as special trains or engines have frequently to be run without previous notice of any kind, it is necessary for the staff upon the line to be at all times prepared for such extra trains or engines.

Danger signal to be shown when signalman leaves his post temporarily.—When it is necessary for a signalman to leave his box for the purpose of re-lighting or re-trimming his distant signal lamps, before proceeding to do so he must, unless otherwise specially instructed, place all his signals at "Danger."

Signalman leaving duty to give information to man by whom he is relieved.—At all signal-boxes where both day and night signalmen are employed, each signalman before taking charge must, in addition to satisfying himself that all the electric signal bells, points, &c., are in good working order, ascertain from the man he relieves whether there is any special circumstance requiring attention, whether the trains which are due to pass have done so, and, if not, what are the exceptions; also, what trains, if any, are signalled, and all other matters the knowledge of which is necessary to enable him to properly discharge his duty. The signalman relieved must give full information on these points before leaving duty, so that the duties of the post may be conducted in an efficient manner, and any inconvenience arising from the change of men avoided. Each signalman must register in the train-book the time of his arrival on duty and the time of his leaving, and place his signature thereto.

Regulation of clocks in signal-boxes.—Each signalman before commencing duty in the morning must, when practicable, compare the clock in his box with the station clock, and if any difference exist he must correct his own by the station clock, so that the correct time may be shown. Where the signal-boxes are some distance from a station, the signalman must satisfy himself that his clock is going well and keeping good time, by comparing it from time to time with the nearest station clock. If a clock gets out of order and does not keep good time, it must be reported to the station-master or inspector who has the supervision of his box, so that the clock may be repaired or replaced without delay.

These Instructions are in addition to those contained in the authorized Book of Rules and Regulations, dated 29th April 1864.

The Common Seal of the Board was hereunto affixed in the presence of the undersigned, two members of the Board, on the 8th day of September, in the year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.
