[No. 32 of 1883.]

AUCKLAND ISLANDS.

THE following remarks on the Auckland Islands, extracted from reports made by Captain J. B. Greig, of the Government schooner Kekeno, are published for general information.

H. A. ATKINSON.
Marine Department,
Wellington, N.Z., 20th September 1883.

Carnley Harbor stands foremost amongst all the anchoring places in the Auckland Group as a dangerous and difficult place for sailing vessels either to enter or leave. The entrance is exposed to the swell of the Southern Ocean, with an out-going current; the land on both sides is high and precipitous; and when the wind is not blowing either direct in or out it often comes from all quarters in violent gusts. Within the entrance there is 50 fathoms, and no anchorage for six miles. Above the Figure-of-8 Island good anchorage will be found in 4 fathoms, where firewood can easily be had, and the best water on the islands.

Musgrave Inlet.—The land on both sides of this inlet is high, with no outlying points to break off the violence of the wind or give shelter. At the head of the inlet there are three deep gorges, which draw the wind from various directions, causing gusts and whirlwinds of great strength, and making it unsafe even for vessels at anchor.

Passage inside Ewing and Dundas Islands.—Sailing through this passage with both leads going, found the depth to vary for the most part in the clear water from 7 to 10 fathoms. The several kelp patches were sounded in the boat, but from the density of the kelp great difficulty was experienced, and the sounding cannot be considered complete. The least water found was 1 fathom, with the westernmost point of Ewing Island, bearing East, distant 2½ cables; and on another patch, with Dundas Island bearing N. by E. ½ E.; distant 6 cables, 3½ fathoms was found. While the tide runs strong the kelp runs under, leaving ripples instead; and, until further examined, this passage cannot be recommended for large vessels, and if taken by small craft care should be taken to keep clear of the kelp or ripples.

[No. 34 of 1883.]

HOKIANGA BAR.

CAPTAIN GREY, of the Government steamer, Stella, reports that the depth of water in both channels over the bar is now less than it was when the entrance to this harbor was surveyed in 1873; the north channel having only 16 feet two hours from high-water, and the south channel 15 feet one hour from high-water. The positions of the two channels have also slightly changed, the north one having gone a little southerly, and the south one a little northerly. Masters of vessels are therefore cautioned against disregarding the signals given by the signalman on the South Head.

H. A. ATKINSON.
Marine Department,
Wellington, N.Z., 25th September 1883.
