JACKSON'S HEAD PASSAGES.

As several vessels have met with accidents when using the inner passage between Cape Jackson and Jackson's Head beacon, masters of vessels are cautioned against the use of this passage.

The recent stranding of the s.s. Kotuku on Walker Rock points to the necessity for great care in working the passage between this rock and the beacon, and to indicate that vessels of the boiler class, when uncertain of the state of the tide, or when the tide is against them, should not use it. It has been stated that the tides are very erratic, and that the calculated time of set cannot be depended upon to within two hours. The master of the Kotuku stated at the inquiry into the stranding of that vessel that the flood stream was running against him six or seven knots, when by calculation the tide should have been slack. Other shipmasters stated that the tide in the passage sometimes runs fully eight knots an hour, and always sets on to Walker Rock, and that there have been many narrow escapes in it owing to ships taking a strong sheer when the tide has struck them.

Charts, &c., affected: Admiralty Charts Nos. 695, 2054, 2684, and 2685; New Zealand Pilot, 7th ed., pp. 204, 205.
