NEW TERTIARY COURSE IN LAND MANAGEMENT

The Associate Diploma in Land Management

Practical management training in land resource management is available by external study from Orange Agricultural College. The course was offered for the first time in 1988 and has over 60 students enrolled from New South Wales and interstate, representing a wide range of public and private organisations directly or indirectly involved in land management.

Offered in the external or home-study mode, the course enables persons from government and private organisations to upgrade, extend and develop their expertise in the conservation management of land resources. Graduates of this course will be competent in the practical requirements of environmental impact assessment, soil conservation and land reclamation and the management of multiple natural, public lands.

Graduates will first and foremost be able to implement field programs designed to achieve sustainable resource development, the conservation of environments and the rehabilitation of damaged lands. As land managers, graduates will be equipped with a combination of both technical and people-oriented skills which will enable them to work efficiently within the integrated framework of land resource management.

To complete the course externally in the normal time (i.e. 4 years) students will complete 2-3 units of study per semester.

Units are grouped into CORE and OPTIONAL studies.

The first six semesters (3 years) of the course focus on CORE studies. These studies are grouped into the four major systems within which land managers must operate:

- Human Resource Systems (socio-cultural, political and administrative frameworks, policy development and planning techniques).
- Natural Resource Systems (earth sciences, soil management, ecology, flora and fauna management).

Victoria Government Gazette

- Technology Systems (remote sensing, engineering and design aspects).
- Economic Systems.

In the final two semesters students may choose units from three land management strands, specialising according to their own situation and needs.

- Strand One: Planning and managing the conservation and use of natural lands, with particular emphasis upon multiple use strategies.
- Strand Two: The prediction, assessment and monitoring of environmental impacts of human activities.
- Strand Three: The reclamation of degraded lands and catchment management.

The course has been designed with input from environmental consultants and professional staff of key land management agencies.
