GUIDELINES FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF ACUTE HOSPITAL SERVICES

Health Department Victoria

11 September 1990

Guidelines

1. Introduction

These Guidelines are concerned with the planning of public and private acute hospital services and are made under Part 2 of the Health Services Act 1988 (the "Act") and pursuant to section 12.

These Guidelines have effect on and from the day they are published in the Government Gazette and, unless sooner revoked, have effect for 3 years.

2. Objectives

The objectives of the Acute Hospital Planning Guidelines are:

- (a) To ensure reasonable access to a basic level of acute hospital services within a mixed public-private hospital system; and
- (b) To promote clinical and economic efficiency in the delivery of hospital services; and
- (c) To encourage the continuing development of the networks of complementary clinical services.

These three objectives about adequacy of services, efficiency and the complementary nature of services are further defined in the principles outlined below.

3. Assessment of Proposals

Any proposal to register or vary the registration of a private hospital or proposal to establish or vary the capacity of a public hospital should address the following principles and provide evidence of the extent to which the principles are satisfied. In considering such proposals, greater weight will be given to the core principles, which are of central importance to these Guidelines, than to the supporting principles.

4. Core Principles

- (a) A ratio of 4:1 acute public and private hospital beds/1000 population is considered to be an adequate level of acute hospital services for a region.
- (b) In regions with greater than 4:1 beds/1000, the extent to which an application to vary the level of acute hospital beds is based on the redistribution of existing beds between health districts (as attached) rather than the addition of new beds will have a significant bearing on the approval of the proposal. The 'source' district (the district supplying the beds) should retain at least 2:0 beds/1000 after the proposed redistribution of beds to the 'transfer' district (the district gaining additional beds). Redistribution can be achieved by:
 - transfer of existing bed registrations between different locations arranged by the applicant;
 - or
 - offsetting of new beds against discontinued registration arranged by the Health Department.

5. Supporting Principles

The supporting principles are listed in priority order.

- (a) The proposed services should be complementary to the existing services in order to provide a balanced range of services. The proposal should include consideration of the following factors:

Public/Private mix—There should be a redistribution of public and private hospital services to allow improved levels of access and choice in hospital service utilisation. The impact on the operation of existing hospital and community based services will be considered.

Generalist/Specialist services—There should be a range of levels of complexity of care and type of services (e.g. rehabilitation, psychiatric, other specialties) offered across a network of acute hospitals. It is desirable to provide new facilities/treatment options not available in existing hospitals.

Integration of proposed services—The proposal should indicate the expected relationship of the new/expanded hospital facility with existing acute hospitals, other institutions and community based health facilities. This should include discussion of referral patterns, admitting rights and other contractual relationships.

- (b) The development of a concentration of complementary services in close proximity to major referral and specialist hospitals is supported. The proposal should discuss clinical and economic benefits to be derived from the complementary nature of the services. The provision of public and private hospitals, birth centre facilities and day procedure centres near major referral and specialist hospitals is desirable in order to promote operational efficiency and choice by both consumers and providers.
- (c) There should be a demonstrated need for additional services as determined by measurement of the current utilisation of existing acute hospital facilities. For example, high occupancy rates for existing hospitals in the district may provide an indication of the need for additional facilities. Similarly, the existence of very high private patient ratios in public hospitals may support the provision of additional private hospital facilities.
- (d) Hospital services should be relocated to districts which have projected population growth at higher than the State average. In general terms, there should be a movement of hospital services away from the central activities district and inner suburbs to locations which service the outer suburbs and recognised "growth corridors".
- (e) The proposal should consider access to existing acute hospital services having regard to the catchment populations of existing hospitals and how adequately the district is serviced including consideration of the availability of public transport, distance and travelling times to existing hospitals and seasonal variation in demand.
- (f) There should be an expansion of dedicated day procedure facilities located both within acute hospitals and as freestanding centres to achieve an increase in the proportion of patients treated on same day basis and to promote patient choice. This should involve the conversion of existing inpatient facilities. Freestanding day procedure centres should enter into an agreement with a public or private hospital located within 15 minutes driving time of the centre for the provision of emergency support and the referral of patients.
- (g) There should be consolidation of existing hospital services in favour of hospitals able to provide a broad range of clinical developments anticipated over the next fifteen years. It is desirable for hospitals in metropolitan Melbourne and major provincial cities to have at least 100 beds. The consolidation of smaller than 100 bed hospitals in metropolitan Melbourne and provincial cities is encouraged.
- (h) Additional acute hospital facilities may be relocated to districts with an aged population greater than the State average, provided that the specific need is for acute facilities and there is evidence that the existing mix and usage of health care services by older people in that district is appropriate. The transfer of additional hospital beds to districts with a high aged population should not occur in the absence of a balanced mix of alternative services.
- (i) The proposal should not result in any significant distortion or imbalance in the supply of acute hospital beds across health regions.

6. Ratio of Beds per Population

The determination of bed ratios in principles 4 (a) and (b) will be in accordance with a register of acute public and private beds held by the Health Department and population projections prepared by the Department of the Treasury. This information will be made available upon request to the Health Department.
