CODE OF PRACTICE FOR THE OPERATION OF WILDLIFE SHELTERS

1. INTRODUCTION

This Code has been prepared to protect the welfare of native wildlife held in wildlife shelters. Its purpose is to provide general guidelines for the rescue and rehabilitation of injured sick, orphaned or misplaced native animals through a network of shelter operators, veterinarians and wildlife authorities.

A permit from the Department of Conservation and Environment (DCE) is required by operators of wildlife shelters. This stipulates the species of wildlife that may be kept and conditions upon which the permit is issued.

Wildlife is defined as any animal of a vertebrate species, other than man or fish, which is indigenous to Australia or its territorial waters. In addition it includes all deer, non-indigenous quail, pheasants, partridges and any other species declared to be wildlife by the Governor in Council. It also includes hybrids of these animals. Other introduced species (non-native animals) and domestic animals do not require a permit to be held at shelters but it is an offence to keep vermin animals. These should be euthanased.

The primary aim of wildlife shelters is to rehabilitate animals to the wild. The objectives of wildlife shelters are to:

- . Provide immediate sanctuary and emergency care for distressed animals.
- . Assume responsibility for the early and accurate assessment of each case and to arrange periodic reassessments to monitor progress.
- . Provide appropriate longer term care for animals suitable for rehabilitation.
- . Adequately prepare animals for survival upon release.

To achieve these objectives, permit holders should:

- . Ensure the management of the species conforms to this Code and standards in the reference material.
- . Attend organised training sessions.
- . Obtain and respect the professional and technical advice necessary to achieve the objectives.
- . Co-operate and communicate within the wildlife shelter network to achieve the objectives.
- . Observe and conform to this Code.
- . Take responsibility for the humane euthanasia of animals unsuitable for rehabilitation.

2. TREATMENT AND CARE

This section includes:

- . Case assessment;
- . Veterinary care;
- . Euthanasia;
- . Quarantine and Disease control;
- . Husbandry;
- . Housing;
- . Enclosure design;
- . Feeding, and
- . Handling

2.1 CASE ASSESSMENT

On admittance to shelters, animals should be assessed accurately and without delay in relation to:

- . Identification of the individual and consideration of its special needs,
- . Disabilities that will prevent successful rehabilitation;
 - loss of limbs or function of limbs, including tails,
 - permanent vital sensory loss (hearing, sight, smell, feeding),
 - infectious disease,
 - permanent damage to the nervous system,
 - imprinted behaviour patterns,
 - inability to adjust to captivity,
 - chronic ill health.
- . The chances of successful rehabilitation and release can be met;
- . The capacity of the permit holder to provide for the captive needs of the species;
- . The significance of the specimen to the Department of Conservation and Environment or the scientific community.

The possible outcomes of the assessment are:

- . Animal is judged to be suitable for rehabilitation and for release back to the wild,
- . Animal is borderline and further assessment is required from other sources (eg. veterinarians),
- . Animal would not survive without radical surgery (eg. amputation of limb) which would prevent its return to the wild,
- . Animal is so badly injured it cannot survive.

In the last two assessments, the animal should be humanely euthanased to prevent further suffering. Note: if the animal is judged suitable for rehabilitation but after the necessary care it cannot be returned to the wild, the matter should be referred to the Department of Conservation and Environment for options regarding this animal. This is discussed in the section on Release.

Case assessment will require the permit holder to consult with veterinarians and wildlife officers, to ensure that the most appropriate course is taken.

The process of rehabilitation will necessitate periodic reassessment to ensure that recovery remains likely and that animals are completely fit at the time of release. Each reassessment should consider the suitability for rehabilitation and release and appropriate action taken accordingly.

2.2 VETERINARY CARE

The Veterinary Surgeons Act (1958) precludes non-veterinarians from practising veterinary surgery or veterinary medicine. Only first aid may be administered by the permit holder. In cases where veterinarians are not able to directly examine the animal, the permit holder should make every effort to obtain veterinary advice. Surgical procedures (pinioning, desexing, amputating, declawing, debeaking) are not appropriate in a wildlife shelter.

2.3 EUTHANASIA

Euthanasia by barbiturate overdose must be carried out by a veterinarian. When permit holders are required to perform euthanasia, a method appropriate for the species should be employed to ensure minimal pain and suffering. Whenever possible, a veterinarian should be consulted regarding the decision to euthanase and the method to be used.

2.4 QUARANTINE AND DISEASE CONTROL

Regular cleaning and disinfection with hospital-grade disinfectant should be applied to enclosures and equipment. Areas known to be infected must be serviced last and should not drain into "clean" areas. An isolation area which is geographically separated from other animals should be provided for housing sick individuals and those of unknown health status.

A number of diseases can be transmitted to shelter personnel from wild animals. These diseases are termed ZONOSESES.

The commonly occurring zoonotic diseases are:

Chlamydiosis (Psittacosis), Salmonellosis, Tuberculosis, Leptospirosis
Yersiniosis, Pasteurellosis, fungal and yeast infections (including ringworm and thrush), parasitic skin diseases (scabies, lice and ticks)

Many of these diseases can be serious to humans and some are potentially fatal. All animals, including orphans should be considered as disease carriers throughout the entire shelter period. The most common avenues of infection are ingestion of faecal contaminated material (Salmonellosis eg.) or inhalation of air-borne contaminated material (Chlamydiosis eg.). Control should be directed at reducing the build up of contamination and reducing the exposure of animals and staff to contaminated material.

Facilities should be designed with the following in mind;

- a. ease of cleaning and disinfection of durable impervious materials,
- b. prevention of spread of contaminated material,
- c. isolation for seriously ill animals,
- d. a "clean to contaminated" work flow pattern,
- e. appropriate drainage systems which allow safe daily cleaning of enclosures,
- f. protection of shelter workers from zoonotic diseases by providing gloves/masks/disinfectants where appropriate and by training staff members in the principles of hygiene.

2.5 HUSBANDRY

Housing and feeding need to follow established guidelines and shelter operators should not experiment unnecessarily,

Native animals in wildlife shelters have certain basic requirements;

- . Food - appropriate in quality and quantity for the species,
- . Water - fresh, changed daily,
- . Protection from,
 - noise,
 - harassment by other animals - contact, sight and sound,
 - predators, vermin and other pest animals,
 - the weather - wind, rain, extremes of temperature and humidity,
 - disease.
- . Clean air - adequate ventilation, free from excessive dust, air-borne pathogens and noxious gasses,
- . Security - mental & physical, a place to hide and avoid stressful experiences, includes a place to sleep and feed effectively. Dark areas, escape proof,
- . Space - sufficient room to behave in a normal manner, sufficient to avoid initiation of "stress" behaviour,
- . Lighting - access to sunlight or "natural" spectrum artificial light, the photo period should mimic the external conditions,
- . Supervision - necessary to monitor and manage the case, stress should be minimised. Ideally the animal should be unaware of the supervision,
- . Hygiene - daily cleaning of enclosures and feed and water containers. Regular water changes for aquatic species to prevent contamination of the animals captive environment. Pens should be well drained.

2.6 HOUSING (See Appendix 1 for Recommended Cage Sizes)

Each case must be assessed individually and a sound knowledge of the biology of the species will be necessary. This information should be sought at the outset.

Housing should be provided in such a way as to;

- . Fulfill the animal's needs during and after the shelter period. Accommodation plays an integral part in the rehabilitation process,

- . Minimize stress and handling,
- . Enable training for survival in the wild,
- . Enable regular (daily) inspection,
- . Avoid imprinting of humans and domestic pets. "Humanising" will make successful rehabilitation impossible.

Note: Some individuals are adapted to living in social groups and rehabilitate better when accompanied by members of their own species. Co-operation between shelters can help solve these problems. Imprinting on humans is much less likely under these circumstances.

2.7 ENCLOSURE DESIGN

The type of housing varies with species and with the stage of rehabilitation. Three main types of housing should be provided at shelters:

- . Hospitalisation - where an intensive non-natural environment is required for recovery,
- . Quarantine - for the recovery period during rehabilitation,
- . Acclimatisation - for controlled exposure to the elements and sufficient space to allow for natural behaviour.

2.8 FEEDING

Food of a suitable quality and appropriate to the species should be provided in sufficient quantity. Fresh water should be provided and changed daily.

Good feeding management is essential for:

- . Rapid recovery and maximum healing potential,
- . Growth in young animals and,
- . Maximum development of natural behaviour and survival techniques.

Captive diets should approximate the natural diet of the species to minimise the impact of captivity and to stimulate normal digestive function (especially raptors and reptiles). A knowledge of the normal feeding habits of the species is necessary (refer to Appendix 2 for reference material for the appropriate species).

2.9 HANDLING

Handling should be kept to a minimum and performed gently and efficiently. Most animals are frightened, physiologically stressed, mentally disorientated and are often sick, injured or in pain.

Care should be taken to minimize the risk of injury to handlers by animals attempting to defend themselves or escape.

3. RELEASE PROCEDURES

This phase of rehabilitation process is most important and must be carefully planned. The long-term survival of the animal is dependent, in part, on the release being conducted efficiently and effectively. To this end, rehabilitation must incorporate not only the physical health and well being of the animal, but must also ensure that the necessary survival skills are present. This is particularly important for hunting animals (such as raptors) or animals with highly specialised diets. In these cases, the animals may have to be taught to hunt or weaned to an appropriate diet prior to release.

In order to facilitate an effective release, it is important to undertake a systematic approach. The steps to be followed in releasing an animal are listed below and only apply to wildlife:

Prior to release, all animals should be inspected to ensure that they are clinically free of disease or parasites which may be transmitted to native populations.

Wherever practicable, the animal should be released at the site from where it was collected.

Where it is not possible to release the animal at the point where it was collected then the options for release sites should be discussed with an officer from DCE.

Prior to release, the animal should be tagged or marked, if practicable, in order to assess the success of rehabilitation to the wild and the subsequent movement of the animal. Tags or markers must be attached in a manner that causes no injury or impairment to the animal. Only approved tags recommended or supplied by DCE may be used.

When releasing an animal, attention must be paid to a number of interacting factors, including weather conditions, seasonal factors and the animal's ecology. More particularly, the following should be considered:

- the animal should be released into suitable habitat (ie. available food and shelter),
- the animal should be released at a suitable time of year; this is particularly important for migratory species,
- the animal should not be released under circumstances which may cause additional stress, such as extremes of weather, or the wrong time of day (eg. releasing nocturnal animals during daylight). Some animals fare better if released in social groups,
- supplementary food and shelter at the site where the animal has been released may need to be provided in some circumstances.

The animal should be transferred to the release site and handled in such a way as to minimise stress. The Code of Practice for Caged Birds specifies the appropriate means of transporting birds.

If release is unsuccessful, despite repeated attempts to rehabilitate the animal to the wild, then other options should be discussed with an officer from DCE.

Where wildlife cannot be rehabilitated to the wild, the wildlife shelter permit provides a mechanism to place such animals. The procedure is based on maximising the conservation and education potential of the specimen. Where an animal cannot be returned to the wild it should be offered in priority to a:

1. government zoo,
2. captive breeding or passive research program,
3. private zoo or wildlife park,
4. holder of a private wildlife licence.

Prior written approval of the Director General, Conservation and Environment (or his delegated officer) is required before any animal is transferred from a shelter as part of the placement procedure.

If an animal cannot be placed through the procedure outlined above, or there is any doubt regarding the release of an animal, euthanasia should be considered or the matter should be discussed with the local DCE officer.

4. STAFF - TRAINING AND EXPERIENCE

Permit holders should possess the appropriate skills to ensure the welfare of the wildlife temporarily in their care. These skills include:

- Accurate identification of species,
- First aid,
- Husbandry,
- A basic understanding of wildlife ecology and population dynamics,
- The ability to access specialist information,
- Handling techniques, and
- A clear understanding of the objectives of wildlife shelters.

In order to obtain and maintain an appropriate level of technical skills, a certain degree of training is necessary. Attendance at training sessions on a regular basis and a demonstrated undertaking to meet the standards embodied in this Code will facilitate permit renewal.

Permit holders should engage sufficient appropriate staff to ensure the welfare of wildlife specimens in their care.

To assist shelter operators in undertaking the care of sick injured or orphaned wildlife and to provide a training facility for potential shelter operators, a permit holder may nominate up to three foster carers to provide assistance. The permit holder will be responsible for the action of the foster carers listed on the permit and are required to oversee the rehabilitation process. Foster carers are restricted in the species of wildlife for which they can care in order to provide a training facility and to protect the welfare of those animals that are difficult to look after.

5. RECORDS

An important aspect of the efficient operation of a wildlife shelter is the compilation and maintenance of detailed and accurate records for each of the animals admitted to the shelter. Such records will assist in the treatment, rehabilitation and release of the animal and will provide valuable case history information for future admissions to the shelter, as well as providing an important resource for other shelter operators.

Persons operating wildlife shelters will note that it is a condition of the shelter permit issued by the DCE that records be kept. The permit specifies the type of information that should be recorded. However, details should be kept of all aspects of the care, treatment and release of the animals and should cover the major areas of responsibility referred to in this Code.

Specifically, records maintained by a shelter operator should include the following:

- . Species and sex of animal being treated. (Correct identification of the animal is vital in order to properly treat, care for, rehabilitate and release the animal),
- . Nature of the injury and possible cause,
- . Name and address of the person who found the animal and/or delivered it to the shelter and the date it was received,
- . Accurate locality data describing where the animal was found. (This information is very important, because if the animal can be released back into the area it formerly occupied, the chances of its survival will be increased. Releasing the animal at the site of collection also reduces the risk of genetic contamination of sedentary populations or populations with strong geographic variations),
- . Details of veterinary diagnosis and treatment - including surgery and medication,
- . Details of care and treatment within the shelter and a description of the rehabilitation steps eg. exercise, training, introduction to correct diet,
- . Details of other advice or assistance from other specialists,
- . Method of disposal and locality of release, noting if supplementary food or shelter was provided,
- . Details of the animal's identification (eg. tag number, band number, etc.),
- . If the animal cannot be released to the wild, then the reason for this, and the means of disposal, should be recorded, and
- . Chronology of consultations with DCE and other persons.

There may be other information, specified in the conditions of the wildlife shelter permit, which should be recorded. The permit holder must ensure that these data are also detailed in an appropriate record book.

APPENDIX 1....RECOMMENDED CAGE SIZES
(1) BIRDS

The Code of Practice for the Housing of Caged Birds details cage construction, and permit holders should be conversant with this Code.

Cage Design

In the design of any bird cage, the ratio between the lengths of the two longest straight lines which can be described on the floor of the cage and at right angles to each other shall not exceed 4:1 unless the shorter of those two lines is at least 500 mm long. The length of this line should be at least twice the span of the wings of the largest bird to be kept in the cage.

Indoor Cage Dimensions

Size of Bird (Approximate Length) Area (sq cm)	Minimum floor	Number birds	Minimum Height (cm)	Increased floor area for each additional bird (sq cm)
100 mm (10 cm) Sp. Zebra Finches	1,000	1	34	500
200 mm (20 cm) eg. Neophema, Budgerigars, Lorikeets (except Rainbow & Red Collared)	1,600	1	34	800
300 mm (30 cm) eg. Rosellas, Cockatiels, Rainbow Lorikeets, Bronzewing Pigeons	5,000	1	90	2,500
400 mm (40 cm) eg. King, Princess, Superb Parrots, Galahs, Long Billed Corellas	10,000	1	90	5,000
200 mm (50 cm) eg. Sulphur Crested Cockatoos	15,000	1	150	7,500
Outdoor Cage Dimensions
100 mm (10 cm) Sp. Zebra Finches	3,700	1	60	1,800

Aviaries/cages with floor area exceeding 20,000 sq cm must be of a minimum height of 150 cm and allow access for physical entry. The minimum length and width of aviaries/cages must be at least 10 times the length of the largest bird in the cage. The care of raptors requires additional specialised knowledge and should only be undertaken by authorised individuals.

ALL PLANNING SCHEMES IN VICTORIA
Notice of Amendment
Amendment S24

The Director-General of Conservation and Environment has prepared Amendment S24 to all planning schemes in Victoria.

The amendment helps implement the "Wetlands Conservation Program for Victoria" by introducing a definition and State policy for all Victorian wetlands into the State Section of all planning schemes. In addition, an area control covers all wetlands of 1 hectare or more in area, plus land within 100 metres of the boundary of such wetlands, where it imposes controls over the use and development of land.

The amendment recognises the environmental, recreational, hydrological and aesthetic importance of wetlands and the high rate of wetland loss since European settlement. The planning controls proposed in the amendment will provide a mechanism for the protection and sustainable use and development of wetlands.

A copy of the amendment can be inspected free of charge during office hours at the Department of Planning and Housing, Bookshop, Ground Floor, 477 Collins Street, Melbourne; Department of Conservation and Environment, Head Office, 7th Floor, 250 Victoria Parade, East Melbourne; Regional Offices in the following localities: Alexandra, Bairnsdale, Ballarat, Benalla, Bendigo, Colac, Dandenong, Geelong, Horsham, Melbourne, Mildura, Orbost, Portland, Traralgon, Wodonga, Yarram; Planning Authorities: Alpine Resorts Commission, Level 4, 1013 Whitehorse Road, Box Hill; Latrobe Regional Commission, 43 Grey Street, Traralgon; Loddon-Campaspe Regional Planning Authority, 391 Hargreaves Street, Bendigo; Geelong Regional Commission, corner Fenwick and Little Malop Streets, Geelong; Upper Yarra Valley and Dandenong Ranges Authority, 5 John Street, Lilydale; each Municipal Office in Victoria.
