SURVEY OF SOUTH COAST OF KANGAROO ISLAND.

HIS Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor directs the publication of the following Report from the Harbour Master, for general information.

*By His Excellency's Command,
CHARLES STURT,
Colonial Secretary.*

*Harbour Master's Office,
Port Adelaide, 15th March, 1850.*

Sir—I have the honor to forward, for the perusal of His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, the subjoined observations which I have been enabled to make in the course of a minute survey of the South Coast of Kangaroo Island, from the completion of which I returned on the 9th instant.

I will, as soon as completed, transmit a chart, on which will be seen a delineation of the coast and of the obstructions to be found in each vicinity, as also the track-lines of the schooner whilst employed on this duty.

It should be premised, that the Southern Coast of Kangaroo Island not having been laid down in the Survey of New Holland, made by Captain Flinders, I have been under the necessity, with a view to distinguish the different land marks, of adopting, in the absence of English names, those appearing on a French chart, which, in as far as regards this particular part, I have found tolerably accurate, though, in some instances, the projections are not sufficiently pronounced.

Proceeding first round the east end of the Island, and following a westerly course, I approached a rock thirty feet high, distant from Cape Willoughby thirty-eight miles, and bearing from it S.W. by W. $\frac{1}{2}$ -W. a considerable ledge even with the surface of the water, extends 2 miles to the S.E. of this rock, which latter is observable eight miles off; its position, with regard to the nearest coast projection (Cape Lenois,) is S.W. by S., distances even miles.

I persevered five miles further on the same course, when, turning round the east horn of an extensive bight (Vironne,) I was agreeably surprised to find a bay, so far protected, as to afford perfect shelter against all winds, except that from the S.E. The holding ground is good and clear, and the soundings vary with great regularity from eight to two fathoms.

The existence of a roadstead is, I believe, very little known; but might prove of essential advantage to navigators when overtaken by heavy weather in the neighbourhood of this otherwise unbarboring line of coast. The principal shelter must be sought as near as possible under the west extremity of the bay, where a vessel may be anchored only a quarter-of-a-mile from the shore, in four fathoms. A tracing of the anchorage, with its soundings, will accompany the chart. When entering the bay, caution must be taken to avoid concealed rocks which lie four miles E. $\frac{1}{2}$ -S. from the west, or Kersaint Cape. They generally produce broken water, but when the wind is not sufficient to cause a lash of the sea, the danger might be neared unperceived.

As these rocks are placed nearly in the middle of the bight, with deep water all around, the mere knowledge of their existence would be sufficient, with ordinary precaution, to remove any possibility of an accident.

During my stay in this bay, I caused the schooner's whale-boat to be carried some distance over the sand, to a considerable sheet of salt water observable in-land, and which I at first considered to be a lagoon. After rowing a distance of six or seven miles, the water became too shallow to permit our further progress with the boat; we therefore desisted, and returned to the more immediate object of my mission, though not before we had, with a few casts of a net, procured a considerable supply of fish, which appeared to abound there.

Eighteen miles further west, I reached a reef, of which a part is visible above the water, and the remainder on a level with the surface. It bears S.S.W. $\frac{3}{4}$ -W., seven miles from Cape Bouguer—a projection W. by S. fifteen miles from the western extremity of the bay above described.

Continuing six miles to the westward, I perceived a line of rocks standing two miles from a prominent cape (Cape du Conedie,) which from that spot, extends its bearings from S. to S.W.

The remainder of the south coast is clear, but too uniformly unbroken to offer any shelter whatever.

All the rocks of which I have spoken are not at a sufficient distance from the coast to be much in the track of vessels; whilst their proximity to the land would be likely, in most instances, to prevent navigators being taken by surprise. But, as too much caution cannot be exercised towards guarding against the danger arising from these rocks, the existence of which I sometime since reported, it may not be deemed superfluous that I should now offer the precise information which a more favorable opportunity for investigation enables me to submit.

Three in number, and perfectly detached as far as soundings will reach, these rocks embrace an expanse of five miles, in a direction from N.E. to S.W. The exact position of the central one is 36° 25' south latitude, 137° 16' 30" east longitude; its bearings from Cape Willoughby is S.W. $\frac{1}{2}$ -W., at a distance of fifty-eight miles; and from Cape Kersaint, (the west end of the bay described above) S. $\frac{3}{4}$ -E., twenty-three miles. The water in the immediate vicinity of these rocks is of considerable depth; sounding taken as near to them as I could approach, gave forty-five fathoms. A channel of equal depth exists between each.

As the tides set with great force in directions E. and W., it is incumbent on Navigators, when within a possibly threatening distance from this danger, to maintain an ample offing to the southward, otherwise, in consequence of a drift tending strongly towards these rocks, a considerable error in the position of a vessel, during the hours of a single night, would, I can state from experience, be the almost certain result.

A report having reached me, that broken water had been observed forty-five miles S.W. of Cape Bedout, I steered in that direction, and made every effort, by numerous traverses and intersections, to obtain a view of the spot. I continued the search to the distance of sixty miles, but without succeeding in my purpose.

As I remembered to have observed, in some of the public prints, the mention of a statement emanating from the Master of the Augusta, that he had seen heavy breakers seven miles south of Neptune Island, on the west coast of Kangaroo Island, I took occasion to satisfy myself of the correctness or otherwise of the assertion.

Thinking it right that all unnecessary alarm should be removed, I can affirm, with perfect confidence, as the result of a most diligent search, that the statement is erroneous, and the warning uncalled for.

On my return passage to Port Adelaide, I had reason to observe grounds for caution on the part of Masters of vessels when rounding Cape Willoughby, to keep at a distance of at least two miles from the shore on account of the currents to be met with in that neighbourhood. These are sufficiently strong to carry a vessel, when only acted upon by light winds, on a ledge of rocks projecting two miles S.E. from the easternmost horn of Antichamber Bay, and which point I have distinguished on the chart under the name of St. Alban's Cape.

The necessity for this caution will be apparent when I mention the fact of two vessels having recently come in contact with the ledge.

Whilst in Back Stairs Passage, I renewed a search (in which, on previous occasions, I had been unsuccessful) for a sand bank, which was reported to me as existing there; but which most coasting masters have, all along, being unwilling to credit.

After repeated trials, I succeeded in establishing the correctness of the information. I found a bank, from the east end of which Cape Willoughby bears S. by W., Cape Jarvis N.W. by N., and the southern Page E. by S. $\frac{1}{2}$ S., a quarter of a mile in breadth, and three miles in length, in a N.W. and S.E. direction, having upon it—at low tide—a depth of water varying from three to eight fathoms; and as soon as the margin is passed, a sudden increase to fourteen fathoms is found.

As the upheaving of this considerable body of sand has no doubt been caused by the counteraction of tide, which, in this passage, operates with great violence, it appears to me likely, that each successive year will reduce the depth of water to be found on the bank; it should, therefore, be guarded against by those commanding vessels of heavy tonnage.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

THOS. LIPSON.
