NORTHUMBERLAND ISLANDS.

Beverley Group.

A SAND spit, not laid down on the chart, extends about half a mile from the S.W. side of the north-western island of the Beverley Group. This island lies south eight miles from Prudhoe Island, and eleven miles N.W. by W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  W. from Cape Palmerston.

F Isles.

A spit, upon which, at a distance of three-quarters of a mile from the shore, there is not more than six feet at low water, runs to the westward from the centre island of the F Isles.

Portmaster.

Department of Ports and Harbors,
Brisbane, 22nd November 1871.

INDISPENSABLE REEF, CORAL SEA.

THE southern limit of this reef is placed on the Admiralty Charts in the position assigned to it by Captain Wilkinson, who discovered it in 1790, in the Indispensable, viz.,  $12^{\circ} 46' S.$ ,  $160^{\circ} 40' E.$ ; but its extent to the north-west on the chart, is less by some 33 miles than the original dimensions given to it by the discoverer.

From information obtained from Captain Nicholls, master of the Delhi, when that vessel was lost on this reef in September last, and from other sources, it would appear that it extends at least some fifteen or twenty miles further to the north-west than is shown upon recent charts.

In the neighborhood of the Solomon Islands a current was then found setting to the north-west at a rate varying from a knot to a knot and a half an hour.

This current is said to be continuous during the prevalence of the S.E. monsoon, and to run in the opposite direction during the N.W. monsoon.
