MARINE BOARD OF VICTORIA.—EXPLOSIVE SIGNALS.

THE following notice received from the Board of Trade, and having reference to Explosive Signals for use at Sea, is published for the information of all whom it may concern.

By order,

J. GEO. McKIE,
Secretary.

Melbourne, 27th September, 1892.

NOTICE TO SHIP-OWNERS AND MASTERS.

EXPLOSIVE SIGNALS.

THE accompanying Memorandum, prepared by H.M. Chief Inspector of Explosives, with respect to the precautions necessary for the safe custody and handling of certain kinds of explosive signals intended for use at sea, has been printed for the information of the owners and officers of British ships.

Serious and fatal casualties arising from the accidental explosion of signals of this description having from time to time been brought to the notice of this Department, the Board of Trade think it desirable to call special attention to the recommendations and suggestions made in Colonel Majendie's report, and to urge upon all persons responsible for the care and use of explosive signals the necessity for exercising the greatest precaution, both as regards the quality and construction of the signals supplied, and also in the mode of stowing them for use.

When defective signals are to be destroyed they should invariably be thrown overboard in the open sea, and at such a distance from shore as to render their recovery highly improbable.

GEORGE J. SWANSTON,
Assistant Secretary Marine Department.

Board of Trade,
June, 1892.

FRICTIONAL SIGNAL LIGHTS.

Memorandum.

The destruction by fire and explosion of a floating magazine for fireworks near Gravesend, on the 11th January, 1892, brings into prominence the risk attending the storing and handling of certain signal lights in common use on board ship.

The result of the official inquiry which I carried out into the explosion above referred to leaves no doubt that the accident was due to the ignition of a frictional signal light or Roman candle, contained in a small case or "magazine," which had been brought from a vessel just returned from a foreign voyage, and which had probably fallen or been roughly deposited in the hold of the floating magazine.*

Other accidents have occurred with this class of light, notably a disastrous explosion on the s.s. Aberdeen off Gravesend, on 1st March, 1884, by which three lives were lost.†

It is therefore most desirable that the attention of ship-owners should be specially directed to the fact that lights of this character, the ignition of which depends upon what may be broadly described as the well-known "safety-match" frictional arrangement (i.e., the bringing into contact of two substances, such as chlorate of potash and amorphous phosphorus, disposed one on the upper surface of the light and the other on a removable cap or, in some cases, on the tip of a removable wooden plug), may, even when carefully made in the first instance, become dangerous by rough or careless handling.

Among the sources of risk may be mentioned the detachment or fracture of the protecting cap, the exposure of the compositions in such manner that their accidental contact becomes possible, the detachment of particles of one of the compositions and the working of the same through interstices within the cap into contact with the composition by which the frictional action is completed, or the accidental ignition by means of a sharp blow or friction of some of the amorphous phosphorus itself, whether detached from the cap or plug or existing on a plug which has itself become detached.‡

Accordingly, it is desirable that special directions should in all cases be given to those who are responsible for the custody and handling of these lights that the greatest care be exercised in dealing with them, and with the boxes containing them, to prevent the lights sustaining such injury as might establish one or more of the sources of risk indicated above.

If a light is taken out of a box and not used, care should be taken, before the light is replaced, that the cap is securely fixed and uninjured, and in the case of lights provided with phosphorus-tipped plugs that the plugs are not loose or detached. Any light, the cap or plug of which has become detached or is insecure or apparently defective, should be thrown overboard.

Frictional lights should always be kept in a box or case by themselves, and the boxes or cases should be required to be of a construction which allows as little play as possible to the light. From time to time the lights should be examined as to the security and condition of these caps (and plugs).

It is needless to remark that, before any lights of this description are received on board ship, they should, before being stowed away, be carefully examined as to the points mentioned above, and ship-owners are advised to refuse to receive any frictional lights as to the quality or manufacturing excellence of which there is any room for doubt, or which appear to present any special or novel elements of risk, or which are not provided with a metallic cap, those furnished with a paper cap being obviously more liable to injury by damp, by knocking about during a rough voyage and by rough handling.

V. D. MAJENDIE, Colonel,
H.M. Chief Inspector of Explosives.

Home Office, 13th April, 1892.

* See Special Report, No. XCVII., dated 1st February, 1892.

† See Special Report, No. LX., dated 13th March, 1884.

‡ In the case of some lights of foreign make which have come under the notice of H.M. Inspectors of Explosives, the construction is of an even more actively dangerous character.

The latest triumph of Chromatic Chemistry, quickly imparts the much admired Golden Bronze tint to Hair of any color, producing the lovely Nuance Chatain Foncée, so that it may be truly said, the hair under its influence seems as if a ray of sunshine had permanently established itself among the tresses.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Saturate the hair with the Sensitiser, and diffuse it with a fine comb—then apply Bronzine, and allow the hair to dry spontaneously. Do not accelerate the desiccation. If the hair is of an insensitive nature, it may be necessary to repeat the process—after this operation is completed, the residue should be thoroughly brushed or rubbed off with a soft towel.

This Bronzine will impart a Golden Bronze Tone to Flaxen, Golden, or Silver Gray Hair.
