Protection of Animals Act 1966 CODE OF ACCEPTED FARMING PRACTICE FOR THE WELFARE OF FARM ANIMALS DURING TRANSPORTATION

INTRODUCTION

Animal Protection legislation makes it an offence to transport animals in a manner that subjects them to cruelty. This code seeks to lay down the requirements of humane transportation of animals by road and rail.

Transporters should ensure that animals reach their destination as speedily as possible, within the confines of legal requirements, and in a condition not significantly less than the condition they were in when they were assembled for loading. The possibility of either injury or illness to the carried animals should be reduced to a minimum. Good management and skilled driving are important to the welfare of animals carried by both road and rail.

For the purposes of this code, transport includes loading, waiting periods during loading, transit, rest periods and unloading at the point of destination.

This code is in two parts. Part I deals with provisions that are general to the requirements for all animals and Part II deals with requirements specific to the various species.

PART I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

1. General considerations

The driver of the vehicle or the appropriate delegated railway official is responsible for the care and welfare of all animals during transport except when either an attendant appointed by the owner or an agent of the owner travels with the consignment.

Animals that become either ill or injured during transport should receive appropriate attention and treatment if possible; if necessary they should be slaughtered humanely.

2. Selection and assembly

Owners or owners' representatives should not present animals that are either ill or injured for transport; the driver of a transport vehicle or appropriate railway official should not permit the loading of such animals.

Exceptions to the above recommendation are animals that are either ill or injured and must be transported either to and from a place for veterinary treatment, or transported for emergency slaughter.

Animals awaiting transportation, either on properties or in saleyards, should have been rested and had recent access to water.

Humane and effective arrangements should be made for the handling and care of any animals rejected as unsuitable for loading.

Animals likely to give birth during transport should not be loaded, and animals should not be transported for at least 24 hours after giving birth.

3. Loading and unloading

Yards and loading facilities should be constructed so that they are not likely to cause injury to animals.

Loading and unloading should be undertaken as quietly as possible; the use of goading devices and dogs to force the movement of animals should be restricted to the minimum necessary to complete the procedure; dogs should be effectively muzzled while working.

Electric goads should be operated only by battery or dynamo and approved by the Standards Association of Australia.

The level of ramps should approximate with the level of the floor of the transport vehicles.

There should be no space between the loading door and the ramp in order to avoid leg injury to animals.

Inclined ramps should be fitted with sides and have a floor that minimizes slipping and injury during loading and unloading.

Animals should not be lifted off the ground by the head, horns, legs or wool during loading or unloading.

4. Trucking density

The density of loading of animals in trucks should be determined by the need to minimize injury but allow cast animals to rise with assistance.

Packing of animals either too loosely or too tightly in trucks predisposes them to injury; partitions should be used to reduce the likelihood of injury.

Either the carrier or the owner's representative is responsible for ensuring that the loading density and configuration is compatible with the welfare of the animals and the capacity of the vehicle.

5. Transport vehicle

There should be no protrusions and no sharp edges on the frame-work, fold-down decks, doors, partitions &c.

The body-sheathing should have a large enough area of contact with the animal to eliminate pressure points.

The sides should be formed so as to prevent the protrusion of the head and limbs of the smallest animal carried.

Floors should be close-boarded and strong enough to bear the weight of the animals being transported, and should have a non-slip surface that is compatible with foot comfort.

The height of either the compartment or deck should provide enough head-room to prevent contact with any overhead structure.

Transport vehicles should be escape-proof.

Where animals are carried on more than one level, the deck structure should be arranged to minimize soiling of animals on lower decks.

The materials used in the construction of transport vehicles should be capable of being effectively cleaned and should minimize the likelihood of injury to animals.

Facilities should exist for the emergency unloading of animals with minimal risk of injury to the animals.

6. Segregation of animals

The factors to be taken into account in segregating animals during transport include species, age, size, sex, and familiarity of the individual animals with each other; specific conditions are laid down in Part II.

7. Climatic conditions

Animals carried on transport vehicles should be protected against prolonged exposure to extremes of temperature and weather.

Road vehicles operating in areas with cold, wet weather should have the front of the stock crate enclosed.

Any side-sheathing provided should neither significantly reduce circulation of air nor limit the access of animals for either inspection or manipulation.

Loaded vehicles and trailers should not be parked so that animals are exposed to extremes of heat for more than one hour where possible without shade and adequate ventilation.

8. In-transit inspection

Inspection of animals should be carried out by either the driver or attendant at roadside at intervals of at least every three hours.

Any animal found to be either cast, injured, distressed or with a limb protruding should be helped by either the driver or attendant immediately.

Every effort should be made to get cast animals to their feet.

A suitable source of lighting should be used to carry out inspections at night.

Either veterinary or police assistance should be sought for severely injured animals as soon as possible.

9. Duration of journey and rest stops

Animals being transported should be offered food and water at intervals appropriate for the species and age.

No animal should be left without water for more than 36 hours; this period may be extended if the journey can be completed within a further 6 hours.

Journeys lasting more than three days should include a rest period of at least 24 hours on either the second or third day; animals should be unloaded, have access to food and water and have sufficient space to exercise and rest.

Journeys lasting less than three days but more than 42 hours should include a rest period of at least eight hours on the second day; animals should be unloaded, have access to food and water and have sufficient space to exercise and rest.

All journeys with animals should be completed as quickly as possible within legal constraints.

PART II—SPECIAL PROVISIONSGeneral considerations

This part includes recommendations appropriate to the special requirements of horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, goats, deer and poultry. These recommendations are required over and above the requirements of Part I.

Horses

It is recommended to either transport or pen separately—

- unbroken horses,
- stallions,
- a mare with foal at foot,
- horses significantly different in size

Removal of hind shoes will reduce the risk of injury caused by kicking.

When general purpose vehicles are used, particular care should be taken to avoid head injury caused by overhead rails.

Mares that are more than 10 months pregnant should not be transported on journeys taking longer than eight hours.

Cattle

It is recommended to either transport or pen separately—

- young calves,
- a cow with suckling calf,
- polled cattle,
- adult bulls
- cattle significantly different in size.

Lactating dairy cows in full production and without calves should be milked at intervals of not more than 24 hours.

Bulls that are tied should not have the headrope fitted through a nose-ring.

Cows that are more than eight months pregnant should not be transported for journeys taking longer than eight hours.

Calves should be strong enough to withstand the stresses of transportation; calves weighing less than 23 kilograms should be considered either too small or too weak.

Calves with wet strings should not be presented for transportation.

Calves should be transported in transports with enclosed fronts.

In summer, young calves should be shaded from the sun.

Sheep

It is recommended to either transport or pen separately—

- rams.

Newborn lambs and newly shorn sheep are particularly susceptible to wind-chill and should not be transported under cold wet conditions in road transports without enclosed fronts.

Ewes that are more than four months pregnant should not be transported on journeys taking longer than eight hours.

Pigs

Either transport or pen separately—

- young piglets,
- sows with piglets,
- boars,
- unfamiliar groups of pigs.

Pigs are quite susceptible to extremes of heat and cold.

In summer, pigs should be shaded to limit sunburn.

Long journeys should not be undertaken in the summer during excessive heat in daylight hours.

In winter, road transports should be fitted with enclosed fronts to protect animals from chilling.

Goats

Recommendations for goats are the same as for sheep.

Deer

Either transport or pen separately—

stags/bucks, hinds/does,
young stock.

Antlered animals in velvet should not be transported.

Current knowledge suggests that deer should be carried either individually or in small groups, under subdued lighting.

Inspections should be made very carefully in case the deer panic.

Travelling crates should be firmly secured to the floor of the vehicle.

Fowls

Chicks should be placed in suitably ventilated containers and should not be overcrowded.

Delays in transport should be minimized and every attempt should be made to avoid chilling and overheating; chicks should be placed in a brooding environment immediately after delivery.

Chicks should be brooded within 72 hours of dispatch; if this is not possible they should be killed humanely.

The containers for transport of newly hatched chicks should be marked clearly with the time of dispatch and written instructions on required holding conditions for the attention of those responsible for conveyancing.

Growing and adult fowls

Crates should be deep enough (about 25 cm) to allow fowls to stand and move, to seek comfort but prevent bruising during transport.

Recommended maximum densities are 55 kg live-weight/m² of crate area in hot weather and 60 kg live-weight/m² at other times.

The transportation of poultry is not recommended when the air temperature is above 35° C.

Fowls being transported under cold wet conditions should be covered at least on the top and sides; covers should allow the entry of air and be removed as soon as the destination is reached.

Fowls should not be held in either crates or containers for longer than 24 hours unless they are given food and water.

Protection of Animals Act 1966CODE OF ACCEPTED FARMING PRACTICE FOR THE WELFARE OF CATTLE*INTRODUCTION

Cattle are kept in situations that vary from extensive grazing in unfenced wilderness to controlled grazing in small paddocks and hand feeding in feedlots.

This code assumes that, whatever the form of husbandry, managers have a responsibility to care for the welfare of the animals under their control and that this care should be separate from the interests of economic production.

The basic behavioural, anatomical and physiological needs of cattle are considered in this document irrespective of the degree of intensive husbandry practised.

The absence of mention of any particular practice in this code should not be seen to imply that such a practice is either acceptable or unacceptable. Management practices need to be considered for their impact on the welfare of animals. The importance of competent stockmanship in animal welfare cannot be over-emphasized. The important skill of the competent stockman is the ability to recognize the early signs of distress or disease in animals so that the cause can be identified and prompt, appropriate, remedial action initiated.

Cattle have the following basic needs:

food and water to sustain health and vitality;
protection from predation that can be avoided by reasonable means;
protection from disease, particularly diseases that are exacerbated by domestication and management;
protection from extremes of climate during certain phases of their life; protection from physical pain and injury.

A. FOOD AND WATERFood

Cattle should be provided with food that will maintain their health and vitality.

Food provided for cattle should meet the requirements of growth, pregnancy and lactation.

Cattle should not be allowed to starve to death.

Cattle too weak to stand and walk should be slaughtered on site.

Where the provisions of health and vitality cannot be met, cattle should be moved, agisted, sold or slaughtered on site.

Cattle being fed for survival should be examined regularly; less thrifty cattle may require segregation for special treatment.

Nutritional factors essential for growth, health and vitality should not be deliberately withheld from cattle.

Cattle should be protected as far as possible from foods deleterious to their health.

Water

Cattle should have access to water.

Cattle should not be allowed to die of thirst.

Water provided for cattle should not cause ill-health.

Where provisions for health and vitality cannot be met, cattle should be moved, agisted, sold or slaughtered on site.

B. PROTECTION FROM CLIMATIC EXTREMES AND PREDATION

All reasonable steps should be taken to minimize the effects of climatic extremes and other factors that produce either cold stress or heat stress in young calves.

Artificially reared calves provided with housing should have a dry lying area, adequate drainage of the floors, internal surfaces and floors that will not cause injury, and satisfactory ventilation and lighting for their comfort.

Reasonable steps should be taken for stock to be attended to promptly in the event of either fire or flood.

Reasonable means should be used to protect cattle from predation.

C. SPACE AND ACCOMMODATION

Pens or tethering provided for calves should not restrict their freedom to stand, lie down, stretch and groom themselves.

Tethered and confined cattle should have enough space to be able to groom themselves, lie down, stretch and stand, and they should have access to feed and water.

Collars and ropes and similar material used for tethering should be constructed and used so as to avoid injury and pain.

Floors of yards and sheds should have a surface that is not slippery and facilitates regular cleaning.

Sheds, pens, yards and lanes should be constructed and maintained so as to minimize the risk of injury and disease.

Holding yards should be large enough to comfortably accommodate animals and not predispose cattle to injury.

D. MANAGEMENT PRACTICESGeneral

Practices that cause pain should not be carried out on cattle if painless and practical methods of husbandry can be adopted to achieve the same result.

Cattle should not be allowed to suffer painful conditions for want of attention.

Frequency and level of inspection should be related to the likelihood of risk to the welfare of cattle.

Hygienic precautions should be undertaken for all operations.

Management procedures carried out on cattle should be competently performed.

Restraint used on cattle should be the minimum necessary to efficiently carry out procedures on them.

Milking practices

Cattle used for milk production and in full lactation should not be left (for more than 24 hours) without relief by milking.

Milking machines should be maintained free of faults.

Artificial rearing of calves

Calves should receive colostrum within the first 12 hours of birth.

Calves should be fed at least once daily either whole milk or milk replacer.

Both stored milk and re-constituted milk replacer should provide all the essential nutrients of whole cow's milk; milk replacers should be re-constituted according to manufacturers' instructions; sour milk should not be fed to calves.

Milk and milk replacer should not be fed in excess of body temperature (37°).

Feeding utensils for calves should be cleaned between feeds.

Plant fibre is required for the development of the ruminant digestive system and should be available to calves after the first two weeks of life.

Calves should be weaned only when their digestive systems have developed sufficiently to enable continued growth and maintenance of health and vitality.

Identification

Ear-tagging, ear-marking, ear-notching, ear-tattooing, udder-tattooing and freeze-branding are the preferred methods of identifying cattle.

Where fire-branding is the only acceptable method of identification, it should be done on animals as early as management practices will allow.

Branding by means of corrosive chemicals should not be carried out.

Dehorning

Dehorning should be performed on animals as early as management practices will allow.

Cattle over 12 months of age should not be dehorned without the use of an anaesthetic.

Dehorning by means of chemicals is not recommended.

Castration

Castration should be performed on calves as early as management practices will allow.

Castration of bulls over 12 months of age should not be performed without the use of an anaesthetic.

Dipping

Dips should be constructed, maintained and operated in a manner that minimizes injury to animals.

Tail-docking

Tail-docking should be carried out only in the interests of animal welfare.

The tail should be cut at an intervertebral disc.

Sufficient length of tail should remain to cover the tip of the vulva.

The operation should be performed on animals as early as management practices will allow.

Speying

This procedure should be carried out only when necessary and by competent operators using an anaesthetic as appropriate.

Mating

Bulls of large breed should not be used on either small heifers or on stock that may have calving difficulties.

Testing of bulls for mating capacity should only be performed using cows with normal reproductive organs; such cows should not be used for longer than two hours in any 24-hour period.

Mustering, driving, yarding, drafting

The use of goading devices for the handling and moving of cattle should be limited to the minimum necessary to complete the procedures.

Electric goads should be operated only by battery or dynamo and approved by the Standards Association of Australia.

Head restraint should be constructed so as to allow quick release to prevent choking.

E. PROTECTION FROM DISEASE

Sick, injured or diseased cattle should be given prompt and appropriate treatment or slaughtered.

Slaughter should be performed humanely.

Appropriate preventive treatment should be administered to cattle for diseases that are common in a district or are occurring in a herd.

Internal medication, such as vaccines and drenches, and external medication, such as dips, should be given in strict accordance with the manufacturers' instructions; over-dosing may harm cattle.

CODE OF ACCEPTED FARMING PRACTICE FOR THE WELFARE OF PIGS

INTRODUCTION

This code provides guidelines for the welfare of the pig. It sets out the basic standards required to ensure that welfare. It may help to identify those situations and circumstances where the welfare of pigs may be placed at risk, and indicates the precautions that should be taken.

The code takes account of established farming practice and present scientific knowledge of the physical and behavioural needs of the pig. As farming practices change and scientific knowledge increases, this code will be revised.

Pigs have the following basic requirements:—

- readily accessible fresh water and food to maintain health;
- protection from the extremes of the environment;
- space enough to stand, stretch and rest;
- protection from disease.

The provision of these needs should be accompanied by regular surveillance to enable the early detection of faults.

This code assumes that, whatever the form of husbandry managers and others responsible for the day to day needs of pigs, have a responsibility to care for the welfare of the animals under their control. The importance of competent stockmanship in animal welfare cannot be over-emphasized.

The code is divided into two parts. Part I details the code of practice for the welfare of domestic pigs in Australia, and Part II contains explanatory notes on recommended procedures.

PART I

1. ACCOMMODATION

Space

Accommodation for pigs should not be the cause of either injury or disease.

Pigs kept in groups should have space to sleep, feed and exercise and they should have a clean dry place in which to lie.

In individual stalls, tethers or pens, pigs should be able to stand, lie with limbs extended and stretch.

The space and facilities for suckling sows should be adequate to allow piglets avoid being overlain.

Floors should be constructed and maintained so as to minimize the risk of injury or disease and to allow pigs to stand normally.

All surfaces in pens and fittings in the building to which pigs have access should be made of materials that can be cleaned and disinfected.

Equipment

All equipment to which pigs have access should be designed and maintained so as to avoid either injury or pain.

Tethers should be constructed and used so that pigs are caused neither injury nor pain.

Feeding and watering equipment should be capable of allowing all pigs ready access to feed and water.

Essential mechanical equipment should be inspected regularly and kept in good working order.

Alternative ways of providing feed and water and of maintaining a satisfactory environment should be available in case of breakdown of essential mechanical equipment.

An alarm system should be installed to warn the stock-keeper of failures of any automated ventilation equipment.

Environment

Shivering and cold-stress in new-born piglets should be avoided through the provision of bedding and/or supplementary warmth.

All pigs should be protected from extremes of climate and provided with shade in accommodation that should not exaggerate temperature extremes or draughts.

In enclosed houses, the level of air exchanges should provide for respiration and removal of excess heat and to minimize the effects of dust, waste gases, and excess moisture.

Sufficient lighting should be available to enable proper inspection of all pigs.

Protection

Pigs should be protected from predators.

Fire fighting equipment should be available to all pig houses.

Pigs should be able to be removed from houses in emergencies.

Housing should be sited in a place considered to be safe from the effects of fire, storms and floods.

2. FOOD AND WATER

Pigs should be fed at least once daily and the diet should be adequate to maintain health and take account of the requirements of growth, pregnancy and lactation.

Water or other wholesome liquids should be available in sufficient quantities to meet the physiological needs of the pigs.

3. MANAGEMENT PRACTICES

General

Pigs should not be allowed to suffer under painful conditions for want of attention.

Frequency and level of inspection should be related to the likelihood of risk to the welfare of pigs.

Hygienic precautions should be undertaken for all operations.

Persons carrying out management procedures on pigs should be able to perform the procedures correctly using appropriate minimal restraint.

Restraints used on pigs should not subject the animals to risk of injury.

The use of goading devices for the handling and moving of pigs should be limited to the minimum necessary to complete the procedure.

Castration

If pigs are to be castrated, the operation should be performed on pigs at the youngest age management practices will allow.

Tail-docking

Where the operation is performed tail-docking should be carried out on pigs of less than seven days of age; or for first-aid in an emergency or as veterinary treatment on the grounds of health.

Clipping of incisor teeth

Where the operation is performed, clipping of teeth should be carried out within two days of the birth of piglets.

Pig identification procedures

Identification practices such as tattoo-branding, ear notching and ear tagging should be completed rapidly and skilfully.

Tusk-trimming

Tusks should be severed cleanly and skilfully above the lower level of the gums without causing damage to other tissues.

Backfat measurement

The preferred method uses ultrasonic equipment.

Mechanical probes should not be used.

Nose-ringing

A rapid and skilful technique should be used when done.

4. HEALTH

General

People responsible for the care of pigs should be familiar with the signs of disease.

Preventive treatment should be administered to pigs for those diseases that are common in a district.

When signs of disease are observed, appropriate treatment should be given immediately or obtained rapidly.

Dead pigs should be removed promptly and disposed of.

Records of deaths of pigs should be kept.

Pigs should not be kept on "pig-sick"* land.

Pigs should be checked regularly for evidence of external parasites and appropriate treatment provided.

Vaccinations and other treatments applied to pigs should be undertaken by people skilled in the procedures.

Treatment should be given only according to expert advice; where applicable, medicaments should be given strictly according to the manufacturer's registered directions.

Pigs with either incurable sickness or painful deformity should be humanely slaughtered as soon as the condition is noticed.

PART II.

1. ACCOMMODATION

Floor Space

It is not possible to relate stocking density to welfare in a simple manner. This is a complex situation involving group size, pen size, age, breed, temperature, ventilation, lighting and other husbandry factors. The observance of any particular stocking density on its own cannot ensure

* "Pig-sick" land is contaminated with organisms that may either cause or transmit disease to such an extent that the health of pigs is affected.

the welfare of pigs. The suggested minimum space allowances, based on contemporary techniques, are shown in the following table—

System	Minimum Space Allowance	Comments
	(Per Pig)
Growing pigs in groups—
up to 10 kg	0.11 m ²	Approximately 20 to 30 per cent. of space allowance provides for a dunging area
11–20 kg	0.18 m ²
21–40 kg	0.32 m ²
41–60 kg	0.44 m ²
61–80 kg	0.56 m ²
81–100 kg	0.65 m ²
Adult pigs in groups	1.4 m ²
Adult pigs in individual stalls	0.6 x 1.8 m	Minimum one side length 2 m
Boars in pens used for mating	6.25 m ²
Lactating sows and litters—
stalls	3.2 m ²	With piglets up to 5 weeks of age
individual pens	7.4 m ²	For each sow and litter
multisuckling groups	5.6 m ²

Pigs being kept under intensive conditions need to be monitored for injury and disease.

Special stalls, rails or other facilities should be provided in farrowing accommodation to minimize overlying of piglets by sows.

The total area of individual farrowing pens should be a minimum of 3.2 m² where weaning is practised at 4 to 5 weeks.

Mating pens should have one side of not less than 2.0 m length, have a non-slip floor surface and be free of obstructions that may cause injury during mating.

Equipment

Tethered pigs require a high level of surveillance to ensure the tethers are correctly adjusted and not causing injury.

The tether should have a quick release mechanism.

Environment

Pigs can adapt to a very wide range of environmental conditions and, except for baby pigs, are able to tolerate a wide range of environments without detriment to their health.

The ranges of temperatures in the immediate environment of the pig that afford optimum comfort for different classes of pigs are:

Piglets—newborn	27–35° C (reducing to 21 at 5 weeks of age).
Piglets—3 weeks of age	24–30° C
Farrowing house	16–30° C
Weaners and growers	18–28° C
Finishers	16–30° C
Sows and boars	16–30° C

The presence of ammonia is a reliable indicator of the build-up of other noxious gases; it should not exceed 20 parts per million of air in an enclosed pig house for more than one hour at a time.

2. FOOD AND WATER

Food

Pigs do not need to have continuous access to feed.

Feed either affected by mould or contaminated by any substance likely to injure or adversely affect the health of pigs should not be used.

Essential constituents of diet should always be given to keep pigs healthy.

Medicated feed should be given only upon professional advice.

The overuse or mixing of antagonistic medicaments or the medicament itself may have an adverse effect on the health of pigs.

Water

Water or other wholesome liquid (such as whey or skim milk) should be available to pigs at all times; this is particularly important during hot weather.

The quality of the water should not be detrimental to the health of pigs.

The level of total salts in drinking water for pigs should not exceed 3000 parts per million (ppm); levels of 4000 ppm may kill pigs.

Medicated water should be used for pigs only upon professional advice.

Enough water should be kept in store to provide for immediate needs in case of a failure of supply.

3. MANAGEMENT PRACTICES

Surveillance

Increased surveillance is required—

when pigs are housed intensively, for farrowing and lactating sows, where either disease or injury exists in the herd.

Castration

If castration is necessary, it should be performed at the earliest age possible by a competent operator.

It is good management practice to perform the operation in the first two weeks of life.

Castration of boars older than 8 weeks should be performed using anaesthetic.

Tail-docking

While tail-docking of piglets is acceptable when used as a preventive measure for tail-biting, it should be carried out within seven days of birth.

Only the last one-half to one-third of the tail should be removed when this operation is performed.

Where tail-biting is a problem, all aspects of the environment, feeding and management should be investigated to identify the factors contributing to the cause so that remedial action may be taken.

Tail-docking of pigs over seven days of age is acceptable only in an emergency or as veterinary treatment on the grounds of health.

Teeth-clipping

During development of the social order, and in competing for teats, the baby pig is liable to injure litter mates and the sow's udder by its incisor milk teeth.

Where performed, the operation should be done skilfully within two days after birth of the piglets.

Nose-ringing

When pigs are run on pasture they may need to have rings placed in their noses to reduce the amount of destruction of pasture.

When this operation is performed, the rings should be placed through the cartilage at the top of the snout competently.

Mixing of pigs

Where unfamiliar pigs must be mixed, mixing should be done in a manner that minimizes aggression; for example use of a new pen, provision of feed on the floor, use of a substance that masks smell, sedation, use of a pen with room for escape.

Restraint of pigs

When pigs are immobilized to carry out a management procedure, the period of restraint should be as short as possible.

Restraint procedures and the equipment used should be chosen to minimize the risk of injury and pain to the pig.

4. HEALTH

General

No system of management should lessen the manager's ability to attend to an individual pig.

No manager should accept the occurrence of disease and not seek professional help.

Managers should apply appropriate preventive treatments to prevent subclinical disease becoming apparent.

Steps should be taken to prevent the introduction of disease to herds.

Deaths should be recorded

Outbreaks of disease should be investigated by persons trained and skilled in the recognition of disease of pigs.

Appropriate treatment should be administered promptly to sick pigs.

Reasonable steps should be taken for stock to be attended to promptly after either fire or flood.

Reasonable means should be used to protect sheep from predation.

C. SPACE AND ACCOMMODATION

Floors of yards and sheds should have surfaces that minimize the risk of injury and disease and allow sheep to stand and walk normally.

General

Practices that cause pain should not be carried out on sheep if painless and practical methods of husbandry can be adopted to achieve the same result.

Sheep should not be allowed to suffer painful conditions for want of attention.

Frequency and level of inspection should be related to the likelihood of risk to the welfare of sheep.

Hygienic precautions should be undertaken for all operations.

Management procedures carried out on sheep should be competently performed.

Restraint used on sheep should be the minimum necessary to efficiently carry out procedures on them.

Shearing

Sheep should be shorn annually; crutching, wiggling and ringing may be required for hygienic reasons and to minimize impairment of vision and risk of fly-strike.

Paring of feet

Sheep affected with footrot may need to have diseased tissue pared away by a sharp instrument; paring should not be so severe as to make sheep unable to walk.

Dehorning

Ingrowing horns should be trimmed or removed before they cause injury.

Removal of the horns of rams over 12 months of age should not be done without the use of an anaesthetic.

Tail-docking

Tail-docking should be performed on lambs as early as management practices will allow.

Tail-docking without anaesthetic should be done only to lambs under 6 months of age.

The docked tail should be long enough to cover the vulva of the ewe lamb and be of similar length for the male lamb; this recommendation may be varied in the case of certain breeds where experience has shown that shorter tail length is not associated with undesirable effects.

Castration

Castration should be performed on lambs as early as management practices will allow.

Castration of rams over 6 months of age should not be performed without the use of an anaesthetic.

Mulesing

The removal of woolled skin in the breech region of sheep is recommended as a valuable lifetime insurance against pain and suffering caused by fly-strike until a more acceptable solution is found.

Dipping

Dips should be constructed, maintained and operated in a manner that minimizes injury to animals.

Mustering, yarding, driving, drafting

The use of dogs and goading devices for the handling and loading of sheep should be limited to the minimum needed to complete the procedures.

Dogs that habitually bite should be effectively muzzled while working.

E. PROTECTION FROM DISEASE

Sick, injured or diseased sheep should be either given prompt and appropriate treatment or slaughtered.

Slaughter should be performed humanely.

Appropriate preventive treatment should be administered to sheep for diseases that are common in a district or are occurring in a flock.

Internal medication, such as vaccines and drenches and external medication, such as dips, should be given in strict accordance with the manufacturers' instructions; overdosing may cause harm.

Approved by the Governor in Council, 17 February 1981—Issued by the Minister of Agriculture

Protection of Animals Act 1966CODE OF ACCEPTED FARMING PRACTICE FOR THE WELFARE OF THE DOMESTIC FOWL*INTRODUCTION

This code has been prepared from the point of view of the welfare of the fowl. Its purpose is to provide general guidelines on standards of accommodation, equipment and management which are appropriate to the physical and behavioural needs of the domestic fowl (Gallus domesticus) in accordance with established experience and scientific knowledge. This code should be observed by people who keep domestic fowls.

Evaluation of bird welfare requires a consideration of the whole environment experienced by the birds rather than a single evaluation of any one component. Variables such as the type of fowl, stage of growth and geographic location make precise definition of standards and practices impractical. This code is divided into two parts. Part I details the Code of Practice for the welfare of domestic fowls in Australia and Part II contains explanatory notes on recommended procedures.

Fowls have the following basic needs:

- accommodation and equipment designed to suit their anatomy and behaviour patterns
- protection from the elements and comfortable conditions of temperature, ventilation and lighting
- protection from other animals
- space enough to move, stretch and rest
- feed and water to provide essential nutrients
- protection from disease.

The provision of these needs should be accompanied by regular surveillance to enable early detection of problems.

This code is based on the knowledge and technology available at the time of publication and may need to be varied in the light of new knowledge.

PART IACCOMMODATION*Floors and other surfaces

1. Floors and other surfaces should be constructed and maintained so as to minimize the risk of injury and disease and allow fowls to stand normally.

Space

2. Fowls should have room to move around and stretch and should have ready access to feeders and waterers.

Equipment

3. All equipment to which fowls have access should be designed and maintained so as to avoid injury to the fowls.

4. Feeders and waterers should be installed and maintained so that every fowl in a flock has access to feed and water.

Protection

5. Fowls should be protected from predators.

6. Fire-fighting equipment should be available to all fowl houses.

Ventilation

7. All fowl houses should be ventilated so that the environment meets the fowl's biological and health requirements.

TEMPERATUREYoung chickens

8. Chickens should be kept warm until they are feathered sufficiently to be able to control their body temperature.

Other fowls

9. Growing and adult fowls should be protected from the effects of extremes of temperature.

Lighting

10. Light intensity of at least five lux at fowl level should be available for fowl inspection.

11. All fowls should experience at least one hour of darkness in each 24 hours.

FOOD AND WATERFood

12. Fowls should receive a diet containing nutrients to meet their requirements for good health.

13. Fowls other than newly hatched chicks should have access to food at least once each 48 hours. The period for newly hatched chickens may be extended to 72 hours.

Water

14. Fowls should be provided with quantities of potable water to meet their physiological requirements.

15. Fowls other than newly hatched chicks should have access to water at least once each 24 hours. The period for newly hatched chickens may be extended to 72 hours.

HEALTH

16. People responsible for the care of fowls should be familiar with the signs of ill-health and operate an effective health protection programme.

17. When signs of ill-health are observed action should be taken to diagnose and alleviate the condition.

18. Dead fowls should be removed and disposed of promptly.

19. Daily records of bird deaths should be kept.

20. Fowls should not be kept on "fowl-sick" land.

1. "Fowl-sick" land is land contaminated with organisms that may cause or transmit disease to such an extent that the health of fowls kept on it could be threatened.

21. Fowls and facilities should be checked for evidence of external parasites at least monthly.

22. Fowls and carcasses should be checked at least monthly for presence of internal parasites.

23. Vaccinations and other treatments applied to fowls should be undertaken by people competent in the procedures.

36. Chicks should be placed in suitably ventilated containers and should not be overcrowded.

37. Delays in transport should be minimized and every attempt should be made to avoid chilling and overheating. Chicks should be placed in a brooding environment as soon as possible after delivery.

2. "Competent operator" is a person who has been trained in the procedures of beak trimming, toe trimming and dubbing, and has demonstrated the required level of skill and knowledge as determined by the appropriate authority.

38. Containers for transport of newly hatched chicks should be marked clearly with the time of despatch and written instructions on required holding conditions for the attention of those responsible for conveyancing.

39. Chicks should be brooded within 72 hours of despatch.

Growing and adult fowls

40. Crates for transport of growing and adult fowls should be designed and maintained to allow them to be handled and conveyed without injury to the fowls.

42. Covers should be used to protect fowls in crates from adverse weather conditions.

HOLDING

43. Fowls should not be held in crates or containers for longer than 24 hours unless provided with feed and water.

44. During holding fowls should be protected from the effects of extremes of temperature.

HATCHERY MANAGEMENT

45. Cull and surplus chicks should be killed rapidly and humanely.

46. Hatchery waste should be treated quickly and effectively.

POULTRY PROCESSING

47. Where stunning is practised, the procedure should be immediate and effective.

48. Killing techniques should ensure a rapid death before scalding.

PART II

A. ACCOMMODATION

(a) General

All housing for fowls should be designed and sited so as to protect them from the effects of fire, storms and floods.

(b) Floors and other surfaces

Deep litter floors require constant attention. Wet litter should be removed as soon as it develops, otherwise it will create a health hazard and reduce the floor area available to the fowls.

Litter needs to be maintained in a dry and friable condition.

Large mud/faecal balls can easily develop on the toes of fowls, causing locomotion and perching difficulties. They should be removed without causing injury to the toes and the cause should be rectified.

Cages should be designed to allow fowls to stand without slipping.

Multi-deck cages should be arranged so that excreta from any cage does not fall onto fowls in other cages.

Nest litter should be changed regularly so as to be dry and friable. Shell grit is not a suitable nest material.

(c) Space

Domestic fowls require space to move around, sit, stand, stretch, and have easy access to food and water. It is not possible to relate stocking density to welfare in a simple manner.

Stocking density is only one aspect of a complex situation involving such things as age, breed, strain and type of bird, colony size, temperature, ventilation, lighting and quality of housing. The observance of any particular density cannot ensure the welfare of the fowls.

The following space requirements are given as a guide to the maximum densities acceptable for current strains of domestic fowls housed according to contemporary techniques.

(i) Deep Litter (where greater than 50 per cent of the floor is litter)

System	Density (liveweight per unit of floor area)	Qualifications
Rearing of fowls for laying and rearing of layer and broiler breeders	30 kg/m ² (6.1 lb/ft ²) (applies to terminal liveweight at 16-22 weeks)	Floor area to include any slatted or metal mesh area and any area occupied by feeding and watering equipment.
Laying and breeding fowls	25 kg/m ² (5.1 lb/ft ²)	Floor area to include any slatted or metal mesh area and any area occupied by feeding and watering equipment and nest boxes. In the case of birds kept for breeding, liveweight to include weight of cockerels. Includes area occupied by feeding and watering equipment.
Broiler chickens	40 kg/m ² (8.2 lb/ft ²)

(ii) Cages

System	Density	Qualifications
Rearing of fowls for laying or breeding	40 kg/m ² (8.2 lb/ft ²)	Relates to cage floor area.
Laying or breeding fowls (includes cockerels) 3 or more fowls per cage	52 kg/m ² (10.5 lb/ft ²)	Densities relate to cage floor area
2 fowls per cage	30 kg/m ² (6.1 lb/ft ²)	Irrespective of the number of birds per cage, each bird should have a minimum trough space of 100 mm (4 in).
Single fowl cages	20 kg/m ² (4.1 lb/ft ²)

(iii) Free Range Arks

In arks with slatted floors, density should not exceed 40 kg/m² (8.2 lb/ft²) of floor area. In solid floor houses, the density should not exceed 40 kg/m² (8.2 lb/ft²).

(d) Equipment

Automatic alarm systems to warn of power failure in fan-ventilated sheds are essential. A back-up alarm system to warn of temperature increase in such sheds is also essential and should operate through an alternative circuit to the power failure alarm system.

(e) Protection

Apart from protection from foxes, cats, dogs, rats, owls and other birds of prey, protection from other fowls is needed. A relatively stable peck order develops in small populations, such as are present in cages, but the peck order is more changeable in larger populations. Low-ranking fowls or fowls of a different colour from the majority can be harassed constantly. They should be able to escape from harassment or be removed. Perches are desirable escape places where fowls are kept on the floor.

Protection from fire is essential. Fires are most commonly caused by:

- Poor servicing of "hot air" brooders.
- Condensation causing electrical short circuiting.
- The use of poor fire-resistant materials, particularly the insulation.
- The improper support of gas brooders, with plastic hoses, creating explosion hazards.
- The placing of plastic curtains too close to gas brooders.
- Spraying of insulation over electrical wiring leading to overheating.

(f) Ventilation

Air movement is required in poultry houses to:

- Remove waste gases and excess body heat.
- Provide fresh air for the fowls.
- Remove moisture from litter, droppings, respiration and spilt water.

The presence of ammonia is a reliable indicator of the build-up of other noxious gases and water vapour. It should not exceed 20 parts per million (ppm) of air in the enclosed house for more than one hour at any time.

If stocking density on deep litter exceeds 28 kg/m² (5.7 lb/ft²) in summer months and 32 kg/m² (5.8 lb/ft²) in winter months mechanical air movement is essential. Assisted ventilation should be capable of moving 4.6 m³ air/hour/kg liveweight (1.25 c f/m/lb).

In fan-ventilated sheds emergency ventilation provisions should be available.

(g) Temperature

Young Chickens (day-old to five weeks)

Newly hatched chicks have poor control of their body temperature. Supplementary heat is required for a variable period up to five weeks of age, when they are able to tolerate a wide range of temperature. The comfort temperature range, as evidenced from alert, bright and active behaviour of newly hatched chicks, is within the range 28°-32°C. The heat provided should be modified to maintain chick behaviour as indicated above.

Growing and adult fowls

Growing and adult fowls appear most comfortable at an ambient temperature of 15°-27°C. Temperatures as low as -4°C can be tolerated without adverse effects provided shelter from wind is available. Temperatures of up to 35°C will not cause adverse effect providing there is adequate ventilation and water available. At all times the operator should use bird behaviour as a guide to temperature effects.

Temperatures above 38°C will lead to failure of the fowls' ability to regulate their body temperature. Foggers, roof-sprinklers, fans or other systems should be used to control and minimize heat build up in poultry houses.

The construction and positioning of nest boxes should not allow them to become heat traps.

Such things as high velocity cold air, inescapable hot sunlight, wet cold floors from leaking or flooding waterers or seepage from outside the building should be guarded against or corrected as soon as fowls show behavioural evidence of their effect.

Feathers are an efficient insulator. Fowls should not be induced to moult during the cold months unless the accommodation can be maintained in the comfort temperature range discussed above.

Fowls prevent heat loss in cooler weather by "hunching", tucking their heads under a wing, and by squatting. During hotter weather, fowls facilitate heat loss by gular flutter*, panting, standing erect with wings held away from the body and raising of the scapular feathers, or with evaporative cooling. No stocking density or other constraining practice should be allowed to prevent fowls adopting such behaviour.

(h) Lighting

Young chicks reared away from the hen require light of about 40 lux on the food and water for the first three days of life in order to learn to find food and water.

The light intensity should be dropped after the third day, otherwise vices such as picking may develop. It can be taken as low as 2 lux provided at least 5 lux is available for inspection by the operator.

Increasing the photo period during the laying period of a fowl's life stimulates ovulation and is used as a husbandry device. A constant day length of between 14 and 16 hours is usually employed. Present knowledge would indicate that a photo period in excess of 20 hours per day may be detrimental to the laying fowl and such practice is therefore discouraged.

For young fowls in enclosed houses on continuous light, a "blackout" training period of one hour in each 24 hours is essential to prevent panic should the lighting fail.

B. FOOD AND WATER

Food

Domestic fowls do not require access to food at all times. Food is eaten quickly and stored in the crop for later digestion. As in other animal species obesity needs to be controlled to avoid disease problems.

Newly hatched chicks have an internal food source in the remainder of their yolk sac which can provide nutrients for up to five days after hatching. Food and water should be provided by 72 hours after hatching or dehydration may become irreversible.

* "Gular flutter" is the vibration of the floor of the mouth cavity (the gular area) and is an evaporative heat loss mechanism peculiar to fowls.

Stale food, mould-affected food, food contaminated by vermin, and food known to be lacking in essential nutrients should not be fed to fowls as disease problems may be initiated.

Medicated food should be used only upon competent professional advice as the overuse or mixing of medicaments or the medicament itself may cause toxic injury to fowls.

Alternative methods of feeding in mechanical systems should be available against failure and there should be enough food on hand, or ready means of obtaining food, in the event of failure of supply.

Water

Water requirements of fowls under hot conditions are greatly increased. Fowls will drink three times as much water at 37° C as at 21° C. Caged layers drink about 25% of their daily water consumption during the two hours preceding the time lights go off, or sunset, regardless of the house temperature. Provision to meet these extra needs should be available.

Medicated water requirements are the same as for medicated food.

Optimum water temperature is between 15° C and 26° C. Every effort should be taken to ensure that drinking water provided to birds is below 30° C.

A minimum of one day's calculated water requirements should be available in storage.

Where bore and/or dam water is used as drinking water, it should be occasionally monitored for potability.

C. HEALTH

Commercial interest in domestic fowls is in the performance of the population and welfare interest is in individual fowls. Any system of poultry management should allow the operator to attend to individual fowls.

Disease should be treated, prevented or modified where possible.

All flocks contain disease causing organisms which may "flare up" and result in acute or chronic disease when these exist in circumstances favourable to the disease organism.

People caring for fowls should be concerned to prevent the development of overt disease by adoption of recognized principles of quarantine and hygiene.

Daily deaths should be recorded as an indicator of flock health. If deaths exceed 1% per week the operator should immediately seek advice from a person trained and skilled in the recognition and treatment of diseases of fowls.

Fowls with incurable sickness or painful deformity should be killed as soon as the condition is noticed. The method of killing should be rapid and skilful, such as cervical dislocation.

D. MANAGEMENT

Operators should take care to see that fowls are not panicked by sudden, unaccustomed movements or noises.

(a) Artificial insemination

This procedure requires a degree of skill. It should not be rushed, fowls should be handled gently, and a high degree of hygiene is essential. Disturbance of fowls should be kept to a minimum.

(b) Beak trimming

All fowls are liable to develop a vice such as feather picking or picking at fresh blood from injured tissues. This quickly extends into cannibalism. The vice may occur under any system of management when the light intensity is above about 3-5 lux. Certain environmental factors may aggravate cannibalism or predispose fowls to it. Some of these factors are high and humid temperatures, exposure to shafts of bright sunlight, excessive aggression and disturbance of the peck order and traumatic injuries. Factors conducive to the spread of cannibalism should be modified to prevent the vice.

Beak trimming is often required to prevent or control cannibalism.

(c) Toe trimming

The male fowl is liable to cause injury to the hen when mating during the continuous breeding period. Where chickens are brooded and reared on wire it may be necessary to trim toes to prevent back injuries. It is often good preventive practice to trim the two inside toes of the male early in life.

(d) Dubbing

Single comb fowls often experience marked injury to the comb resulting from fighting, or from abrasion. Secondary infections may then arise from the injury. To prevent these problems it may be less traumatic overall to remove part of the comb while the fowl is very young. This operation is known as dubbing and should be carried out before two weeks of age.

(e) Other surgical practices

De-winging, pinioning, notching, tendon severing are occasionally done to fowls to restrict flight. These are unwarranted practices and should not be performed. If flight restriction is required, the flight feathers of one wing should be trimmed with scissors.

Castration, also known as surgical caponizing, requires entry into the abdominal cavity and is an act of veterinary surgery requiring anaesthesia and surgical training appropriate only to a registered veterinary surgeon.

(f) Blinkers

These are opaque plastic spectacles fitted to the fowl's nostrils. They restrict forward vision without interfering with peripheral vision and are used as a measure of last resort to control cannibalism. They should be applied by a competent operator and only after fowls are completely familiar with their accommodation.

(g) Moulting

Laying fowls are sometimes induced to stop production of eggs for a period to prolong their useful productive life. The commercial method employed is induction of a moult that causes fowls to shed their feathers and lose body fat stores. The method requires denial of food and water. This code specifically outlines the limits of denial of food and water.

Even the limits recommended in the code may allow marked dehydration if moulting induction is carried out during hot weather. This should be completely avoided.

The effect of moulting upon the fowl's ability to regulate its body temperature is described earlier under "Temperature".

E. TRANSPORTATION

Newly hatched chicks

The yolk sac reserve may allow the chick to survive for up to five days after hatching. During this time it will become severely dehydrated if not given water within 72 hours of hatching. Water should be provided to the chick as soon as possible after hatching.

Growing and adult fowls

Crates should be deep enough (approximately 25 cm) to allow fowls to stand and move to seek comfort but prevent bruising during transport. The table below is given as a guide to the maximum densities in most circumstances of transportation.

Season	Liveweight per unit of crate floor area
Hot weather	55.0 kg/m ²
Other times	60.0 kg/m ²

When the air temperature is 30°C or above, fowls in transit may become dehydrated. In these circumstances precaution must be taken in the pick up and transportation of fowls to protect them from the effects of heat and dehydration.

When the temperature is 35°C or above, fowls should not be picked up and transported at that time because of the severe effects of heat and dehydration.

Chilling during transport is aggravated by rain and wind and should be prevented by covering at least the front and top of the vehicle to protect the fowls. The covers should allow the entry of air and be removed as soon as the destination is reached.

Poultry "pick-up"

Fowls should be handled gently to avoid bruising and joint dislocation or bone breaks. Care should take precedence over speed and labour cost.

Herding of fowls for pick-up should be done only under the control of an experienced person. Suffocation and bruising must be avoided. Records of bruising levels should be collated at the processing plant to assist pick up staff in improving their skill and care in herding, catching and crating fowls.

Sick fowls should not be crated and should be humanely slaughtered.

PUBLICATION—A VICTORIA GOVERNMENT GAZETTE is published every WEDNESDAY EVENING unless advertised otherwise.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—The annual subscription rate, including postage, is $72, payable in advance.

PRIVATE ADVERTISEMENTS—Advertisements will be received by the Government Printer not later than the day preceding publication—at ordinary rates at or before ONE p.m. and at double rates between ONE p.m. and HALF PAST THREE p.m. The charge for ADVERTISEMENTS is 90 cents per line single column and $1.80 per line double column. The charge for a full page is $135. The title forms one or more lines as a heading. On an average ten words make a line of single column. Every signature must likewise be counted as a line. The final words of a paragraph though only portion of a line, must be counted as one line. Signatures (in particular) and proper names must be written very clearly in the text: ONE SIDE ONLY of each sheet of paper should be written upon.

All documents NOT CLEARLY PREPARED will be returned unpublished. Where brands occur, not provided for by the ordinary letters of the alphabet, a written explanatory description also must be furnished.

PAYMENTS—Unless the advertiser has a Credit Account, all payments are required in advance. Remittances should be made by cheque, postal order or money order, payable to "GOVERNMENT PRINTER".

CORRESPONDENCE—All correspondence should be addressed to "The Victorian Government Printer, P.O. Box 203, North Melbourne, 3051".
