Protection of Animals Act 1966
CODE OF ACCEPTED FARMING PRACTICE FOR THE WELFARE OF DEER

INTRODUCTION

Domesticated deer are kept in situations varying from small enclosures on fauna parks or intensive deer farms, to extensive grazing at low stocking rates on unimproved pastures.

This Code assumes that, whatever the form of husbandry, managers have a duty to care for the welfare of the animals under their control, and that this care should be separate from the interests of production.

The basic behavioural, anatomical and physiological needs of deer vary considerably between species and are considered in this Code. The absence of mention of any particular practice should not be seen to imply that such a practice is acceptable or not acceptable.

Management practices need to be considered for their impact on the welfare of animals. The importance of competent stockmanship in ensuring animal welfare cannot be over-emphasized. An important skill of the competent stockman is the ability to recognise the early signs of distress or disease in animals, so that the cause can be identified and prompt, appropriate, remedial action taken.

Deer have the following basic requirements:

- Food and water, to sustain health and vitality
- Protection from predators
- Protection from extremes of climate
- Provision of appropriate management to allow for the establishment of herd social hierarchy
- Protection from disease
- Protection from physical pain and injury

Further advice on the husbandry and nutrition programmes and disease control procedures for deer can be obtained from the Victorian Deer Breeders Association and Agnotes provided by the Victorian Department of Agriculture.

FOOD AND WATER

Deer should be provided with food that will maintain health and vitality

Food provided for deer should meet the requirements for annual cycles in froth, pregnancy and lactation
Deer should not be allowed to starve to death

Where requirements of health and vitality cannot be met, deer should be moved, agisted, sold, or slaughtered on site

Deer being fed for survival should be examined regularly; less thrifty deer may need to be segregated for special treatment

Deer too weak to stand and walk should be slaughtered on site

Nutritional factors essential for growth, health and vitality should not be deliberately withheld from deer

Deer should be protected as far as possible from dietary components and foreign materials deleterious to their health

Changes of diet generally require gradual introduction of new components over several days.

WATER

Deer should have access to water

Deer should not be allowed to die of thirst

Drinking water that may cause ill-health should not be provided for deer

Drinking water should be provided to deer in a way that minimises fouling by animals

Where the requirements of health and vitality cannot be met, deer should be moved, agisted, sold or slaughtered on site.

PROTECTION FROM CLIMATIC EXTREMES AND PREDATION

Farmed deer should have access to sufficient shelter and shade to minimise cold and heat stress

All reasonable steps should be taken to minimise the effects of climatic extremes and other factors that produce either cold or heat stress. Bush or other shelter in paddocks can minimise the effects of stress.

Reasonable steps should be taken to ensure that deer may be attended to promptly in the event of either fire or flood

Reasonable means should be used to protect deer from predation.

SPACE AND ACCOMMODATION

Deer require social interactions with members of their own species. Management should limit the effects of stress and abnormal aggressive behaviour between herd members

Facilities for deer should be constructed, maintained and used so as to minimise the risk of injury and disease

Holding yards should be of appropriate size to comfortably accommodate animals and not predispose them to injury.

MANAGEMENT PRACTICES

General

Practices that cause pain should not be carried out on deer if painless and practical methods of husbandry can be adopted to achieve the same result

Deer should not be allowed to suffer painful conditions for want of attention.

Frequency and level of inspection of deer should be related to the likelihood of risk of their welfare

Appropriate hygienic precautions should be undertaken for all operations

Management procedures carried out on deer should be performed competently

Restraint used on deer should be only as much as is needed to efficiently carry out procedures on them.

Identification

Ear-tagging, ear-marking, ear-notching, ear-tattooing and freeze branding are the preferred methods of identifying deer

Branding by means of corrosive chemicals and fire-branding should not be carried out.

Castration

Castration should not be undertaken until the testicles have descended into the scrotum

Castration of deer should be performed when the animal has been made insensitive to pain using anaesthesia or analgesia and techniques to control bleeding.

Removal of Antlers

For protection of handlers, other deer, and facilities, male deer should have their antlers removed annually before development of hard antler

Removal of velvet antlers should be the responsibility of a registered veterinary surgeon. The procedure should be performed when the animal has been made insensitive to pain using analgesia, anaesthesia, tranquilisation or sedation as appropriate

Removal of hard antlers should be undertaken in a manner that minimises discomfort to the animal.

Mustering, Driving, Yarding, Drafting

Handling facilities should be constructed and used in such a way that injury to deer, and pain and fear, are minimised

Deer in hard antler should not be yarded with other deer.

Protection from Disease

Sick, injured or diseased deer should be given prompt and appropriate treatment or slaughtered

Slaughter should be performed humanely

Appropriate preventive treatment should be administered to deer for diseases that are common in a district or are occurring in a herd

Internal medication, such as vaccines and drenches, and external medication such as dips, should be given in a responsible manner. Over-dosing may harm deer.
