Occupational Health and Safety (Asbestos) Regulations 1991

In accordance with the provisions of the Subordinate Legislation Act 1962, notice is given of the proposal to make the above regulations.

A Regulatory Impact Statement has been prepared as required by the Subordinate Legislation Act 1962 and written comments on the Statement are now invited.

The proposed regulations will replace the existing Labour and Industry (Asbestos) Regulations 1978. The existing regulations provide for a level of exposure to asbestos which recent studies have found to be unacceptable. In addition, the 1978 regulations do not adequately deal with the activities associated with asbestos removal.

Asbestos began to be widely used in Australia after the Second World War. It was employed in a wide range of applications, including building products, industrial processes and automotive friction materials. As a result of the recognition of the dangers of exposure to asbestos, progress has been made to eliminate its use through the substitution of other materials. This process of substitution has eliminated its use in the majority of its former applications. However, a few applications still exist for which substitutes are, at present, technically unsatisfactory. The other area of concern relates to asbestos materials used in buildings and structures; this is commonly known as in-situ asbestos.

The objective of the proposed Asbestos Regulations is to prevent asbestos related disease among employees working in processes which use asbestos and employees likely to be exposed to airborne asbestos in workplaces. Australian data indicates that the lifetime risk for males of contracting mesothelioma is about 1:400. (Mesothelioma is a normally rare form of cancer associated with asbestos exposure.) When other asbestos related cancers are taken into account, about 11,200 cases of asbestos related cancers can be expected over the next 40 years in Victoria. The Regulatory Impact Statement analysis indicates that the proposed regulations will reduce the expected number of asbestos related deaths through cancer by approximately 2,230 over the next 40 years.

Copies of the Regulatory Impact Statement may be obtained by writing to: Mr Michael Jenkins, Standards Development Program, Occupational Health and Safety Authority, Level 10, Nauru House, 80 Collins Street, Melbourne 3000, or by telephoning Ms Cynthia Malik on 655.6709.

Written submissions should be sent to the above address no later than 28 days from the date of publication of this advertisement.
