Each of the five Development Contribution Plans:

ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Parliamentary Committees Act 1968
TERMS OF REFERENCE FOR REVIEW OF
RIGHT TO SILENCE

Under the powers found in Section 4F (1) (a) (ii) and Section 4F (3) of the Parliamentary Committees Act 1968 the Governor in Council refers the following matters to the Scrutiny of Acts and Regulations Committee—

The issue of right to silence encompasses two categories—the right of a suspect not to answer questions before trial (pre-trial silence) and the right of an accused not to give evidence at trial (at-trial silence).

In 1994 the United Kingdom introduced the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act which provides that the court may draw “whatever inferences appear proper” if the accused fails to mention facts later relied on in his defence when he or she is questioned by police or charged. The court may also draw “whatever inferences appear proper” where an accused refrains from testifying after the trial judge has informed the accused in court that he or she can give evidence and that if he or she does not testify the court can draw whatever inferences appear proper.

Across Australian jurisdictions there are various approaches to the issue of allowing comment where an accused person exercises his or her right to silence. In all jurisdictions there is an absolute right to silence at the police questioning stage of proceedings. In relation to at-trial silence, Commonwealth and New South Wales legislation allows the judge or any other party (other than the prosecutor) to comment on the failure of the defendant to give evidence.

South Australia, Western Australia, the Australian Capital Territory and Tasmania have legislation to the effect that the failure of any person charged with an offence to give evidence shall not be made the subject of any comment by the prosecution. The Northern Territory and Victoria have legislation which forbids comment on an accused’s silence at trial by either the judge or prosecutor. Queensland’s legislation is silent on the matter of commenting where an accused is silent at trial. Therefore comment can be made by a prosecutor as well as a judge or any other party.

There is a perception that people who are innocent will provide an explanation for their actions and that silence is used as a shield by criminals. This must be viewed in the context of ensuring that persons charged with offences receive a fair trial.

The Committee is requested to inquire into the issue of the right to silence, examining issues including the appropriateness of allowing comment, and the type of comment, that might be made where an accused remains silent. The Committee is asked to consider the desirability of introducing legislation equivalent or similar to the English scheme.

The Committee is requested to make its final report to Parliament by the first day of the 1998 Spring Parliamentary sittings.
